State University Library 29104 OITO Seale University Library Abron Mich OITO Acid Mich OIM

VOL. LXXIX-NO. 2049.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1904.

PRICE TEN CENTS.

Houghton, Mifflin and Company's New Books

ALREADY PUBLISHED

AGNES REPPLIER'S new book of essays COMPROMISES

This book has all the charm of gayety, bantering humor, felicitous quotation, and flashing jeux d'esprit which have made her essays a stimulus and a delight. $1.10, net. Postage 9 cents.

NATURE'S INVITATION

By BRADFORD TORREY

Nature Studies in New Hampshire, Florida, Texas and Arizons. $1.10, net.

A noted physician's contribution to the discussion of immertality. 85 cents net. Postage 6 cents.

SCIENCE AND IMMORTALITY

By WILLIAM OELER

JOURNALISM AND LITERATURE

By H. W. BOYNTON

"For the most part Mr. Boynton's essays hover in a polite world where literature learns good breeding from contact with life."— Evening Post, New York. $1.25, net. Postage 10 cents.

WHERE DOES THE SKY BEGIN? THE DeMONARCHIA OF DANTE

By WASHINGTON GLADDEN

A discussion of the great themes of the spirit with the purpose of bringing

A translation of Dante's famous essay on Government, hitherto inaccessible to the general reader. $1.25, net. Postage 11 cents.

CHARADES

By WILLIAM BELLAMY

Mr. Bellamy's "Third Century of Charades" is just the book for an evening's

A study of the literary and spiritual values of the Book of Eccle ertainment. 85 cents, not. Postage 11 cents.

Translated by AURELIA HENRY

THE WORDS OF KOHELETH

By JOHN F. GENUNG

BALANCE: The Fundamental Verity

By ORLANDO J. SMITH

Offering a key to the fundamental scientific interpretations of the System of Nature, a definition of Natural Religion, and a consequent agreement between Science and Religion.

"A demonstration that Religion and Science stand on the same rock."—EDWIN MARKHAM.

$1.25, net. Postage 9 cents. (Ready October 8.)

TO APPEAR SHORTLY

Letters of JOHN RUSKIN to CHARLES ELIOT NORTON

Autobiography of MONCURE D. CONWAY

Two volumes, with many interesting portraits.

Two volumes, with portraits and fac-simile letters. $6.00, net Postage extra.

The Dial, Chicago says: "We are inclined to think that Mr. Conway's Autobiography will turn out to be the most valuable publication of the season in the department of biography; and that the only other work likely to vie in personal interest with it will be the collection of letters written by John Ruskin to Charles Ellot Norton."

WOMEN IN THE FINE ARTS. By CLARA ERSKINE CLEMENT. Illustrated. $2.50, net. Postage 15 cents. ROUTINE AND IDEALS. By LE BARON R. BRIGGS.

THE AMATEUR SPIRIT. By BLISS PERRY, $1.25, net. Postage extra.

BITS OF GOSSIP. By REBECCA HARDING DAVIS. $1.25, net. Potage extra.

Fifth Edition of the New Book by the Author of "Rebecca"

THE AFFAIR AT THE INN By KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN and Others

Illustrated in tint $1.25

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN AND COMPANY, Publishers BOSTON AND NEW YORK

The Nation.

A WEEKLY JOURNAL DEVOTED TO Politics, Literature, Science and Art.

FOUNDED IN 1865.

[Entered at the New York City Post Office as second-class mail matter.]

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER. THE WEEK 267

EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
George Frisbie Hoar			 		 270
A Candid Republican Roosevelt's Philippine Va	rintion		 		 271
Our Election Augurs			 	 	 272
The Gospel of Work for t	be Ind	ians	 	 	 273
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE:
Irish Affairs			 	 	 273
More About Fouché			 	 	 275
CORRESPONDENCE:
Non Tali Auxilio					276
Total Abstinence in Gerr	DADY		 		 276

NOTES...... 277

Reni	pert'	at Eas	of of	Lope	e de	Ver	za.								9
The	Qui	ntesse	nce	of I	been	ism
The	Stor	y of	Cha	mber	Mu	sic.
The	Lett	ers as	nd S	peec	hes e	of O	liv	er	C	r	B	a W	re	Ш
Belg	dan .	Life i	n T	own	and	Cou	nti	y.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Three dollars per year in advance, postpaid, in any part of the United States or Canada; to foreign countries comprised in the Postal Union, $4,00.

any part of the United States or Canada; to foreign countries comprised in the Postal Union, $1,00.

The date when the subscription expires is on the address label of each paper, the change of which to a subsequent date becomes a receipt for a remittance. No other receipt is sent unless requested. Remittances at the risk of the subscriber, unless made by registered letter, or by check, express order or Postal Order payable to "Publisher of the Nation".

When a change of address is desired, both the eld and new addresses should be given. Address THE NATION, Box 794, New York. Publication Office, 208 Broadway.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.

Fifteen cents per agate line, each insertion; 16 times to the inch.

Twenty per cent. advance for choice of page or top of column.

A column, $60 each insertion; with choice of

A page, $60 each insertion; front cover page, $80. Advertisements must be acceptable in every re-

Copy received until Tuesday, 5 P. M.

DISCOUNTS.

TIME.						*
9 1039	Trioi			 		. 5 per cent.
R	0.0
1.02	66
10	86			 		1879
30				 		.10 "
RO .	86			 		.20 "
69				 		95 11
0.40		*****	****
$100	withi	n a yes	F	 		.10 per cent
250				 	*	.1914 "
500	60	66			*	18 "
750	04	44
1 000	45			  		48 11
1,000	44	66		 		.80 "
1.500		9.0		 		.30 "
8.000	91	94

The NATION is sent free to those who advertise in it as long as advertisement continues.

Educational.

CONNECTICUT, Farmington.

MISS POR PER'S SCHOOL

Next school year opens Sept. 24, 1994.

For full information apply to Mrs. Robert Porter Keep.

MASSACHUSETTS, Boston.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY Law School.
New features. Address the Desn.
M. M. Bigelow.

DR. AND MME. CHERBULIEZ REceive boys for instruction in German and French.

Miss Baldwin's School for Girls.

Preparatory to Bryn Mawr College, Bryn Mawr, Pa. Within 13 years 177 pupils have entered Bryn Mawr College from this school. Diploma given in General and College Preparatory Courses. Fine fireproof stone building, 25 acres of beautiful grounds. For circular, address the Secretary.

Fiorence Baldwin. Ph.B., Principal. Jane L. Brownell, A.M., Associate Principal.

ST. AGNES' SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
Albany. N Y.
Preparation for leading colleges. Also advanced course, with diploma. Separate staff of chaperons, besides teachers. Three well-equipped laboratories.
Health first consideration. Catalogue. MISS SEABURY, Head of School. BISHOP DOANE, President Board of Trustees.

HOOSAC SCHOOL

HOOSICK, N. Y. Church School for boys. Prepares for college. Situated among the hills of the Berkshire Range, 30 miles from Abany. For catalogue apply to Rev. E. D. TIBBITS, Rector. Rt. Rev. W. C. DOANS, D.D., Visitor.

ROCK RIDGE HALL

A School for Beys. Location high and dry. Laboratories, Shop for Mechanic Arts. A new gymnasium with swimming pool. Strong to takers. Earnest boys. Fits for College, Scientific School and Business. Illustrated pamlinia (lege, Scientific Schror and lege, Scientific Schror and phiet sent free.

Dr. G. R. WHITE, Principal, Wellesley Hills, Mass.

Mrs. Chapman and Miss Jones

Boarding and Day School for Girls. For circulars address Miss C. S. Jones, Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia.

EDGEWORTH Boarding and Day School for Girls.
122 and 124 West Pranklin Street, Baltimore, Md. Will re open September 39, 1904.
Mrs. H. P. LEFEBVRE, Miss E. D. HUNTLEY, Principals

MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

School for Young Girls. Special care of health.

Mrs. CHARLTON T. LEWIS.

School Agencies.

THE FISK TEACHERS' AGENCIES.

RVERRYT O. FIRE & Co., Proprietors.
4 Ashburton Place, Boston; 1503 Pa. Ave., Washington;
155 Firth Ave., New York; 144 Cent. Bidg., Mineapolis;
533 Cooper Bidg., Denver; 80 Third St., Portland; 203
Mich. Bidd., Chicago; 445 Stimson Block, Lox Angeles;
Hyde Block, Spokane; 420 Parrot Bidg., San Francisco,

A LBANY TEACHERS' AGENCY, 81 Chapel St., Albany, N. Y.—Provides schools of all grades with competent teachers. Assists teachers in obtaining positions.

HABLAN P. FRENCH, Proprietor.

SCHERMERHORN Teachers' Agency.
Teachers Schools Tutors Governess Prop Teachers—Schools—Tutors—Governess—Property.
Tel. 6129 18th.
JOHN C. ROCKWELL, Mgr., 3 E. 14th St., N. Y. C.

Astor Edition of Poets

SEND FOR LIST.

Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York

F. W. CHRISTERN

(DYRSEN & PFEIFFER, Successors). 16 West Sid St., opposite the "Waldorf," New York.
Importers of Foreign Books. Agents for the leading Paris Publishers. Tauchstix's British authors. Teubner's Greek and Latin Classics. Catalogue of stock mailed on demand. New books received from Paris and Leipzig as soon as issued.

Spieker's Greek Prose Composition

By Edward H. Spieker, Ph.D., Associate Professor of Greek, Johns Hopkins University.

University.

Intended for use in college classes, this book assumes that the student has had some practice in turning connected English sentences into Greek, and that he is therefore familiar with the principal forms of inflection. For the ordinary course one hundred and twenty exercises are given, followed by twenty-five based especially upon Demosthenes and Plato. The introduction does not try to take the place of grammar, but gives merely the main points which will be of special assistance to the student. The vocabulary includes all the words which will be needed in writing the exercises.

AMERICAN BOOK COMPANY

New York Cincinnati Chicago Boston

Lemcke & Buechner

PUBLISHERS AND CENERAL BOOKSELLERS

MAIN STORE:

BRANCH STORE:

11 East 17th Street New York

Columbia University Bookstore

BOOKS of any description, American and Foreign, in whatever language.

SCHOOL BOOKS, quantities or single copies, at lowest rates.

Free of duty importation for LIBRA-RIES a specialty.

THE BAKER & TAYLOR CO. Library Department

We have sold books to librarians for fifty ears. We have the largest stock in the largest book market in the country.

We fill orders promptly, completely, and intelligently.

Wholesale Booksellers and Publishers

33-37 East 17th Street, Union Square, North, New York.

STUDY and PRACTICE of FRENCH in 4 Parts.
L. C. BONAME, Author and Pub., 1930 Chestaut St.,
Philadelphia, i.a.
Well graded series for Prepararory Schools and Colleges. No time wasted in superficial or mechanical work. The Course (French text with vocabul-ry) is loxical and progressive, combining conversation and composition with thorough drill in Pronunciation, Elementary Grammar, Syntax, and the study of Idioms.
Part I. (60 cts.): Primary Grade. Prit II. (90 cts.): Intermediate Grade. Prit III. (91 00): Advanced Grade.
Prit IV. (35 cts.): Handbook of Pronunciation for Advanced Grade; concise and comprehensive.

OWNERS of GENUINE SPECIMENS of OLD BILVER, made prior to 1800, who desire to dispose of same privately, are invited to send par-ticulars, photographs, etc., to OLD PLATE, care of Jewelers' Circuiar, 11 John 8t., New York.

You should read The Bright Face of Danger.
Robert Netlack Stephens's most stirring story, litestrations by Harry C. Edwards. $1.50.

^{°°°} Copies of the Nation may be procured in Paris at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera ; in Lon-don of B. F. Stevens & Brown, Trafaigar Square,

New Books from John Lane's Fall List

THE TRUTH ABOUT MOROCCO

AN INDICTMENT OF THE BRITISH FOREIGN OFFICE By M. Aflalo

With an Introduct.on by R. B. Cunninghame Graham 8vo. $1.50 net.

8vo. §1.50 net.

"Those who wish to form a reliable opinion about the country of the Moor and its inhabitants should give this clearly written volume their closest and most unprejudiced consideration.—Ion PERDICARIS, New York Sun.

EMILE ZOLA: NOVELIST AND REFORMER

By Ernest Alfred Vizetelly

With numerous illustrations, portraits, etc.

"Indispensable to the student of literature."-GUY CARLETON LEE, Baltimore Sun.

8vo. $3.50 net

FIFTY LEADERS OF BRITISH SPORT

A Series of 50 Portraits of Living Sport-men

By Ernest Elliott With Biographical Sketches and an Introduction by P. G. Aflalo Large 8vo. $6 00 net

AFRICA HELEN FROM SOUTH ALLISTON TO NORTH

A Novel. By the author of "Elizabeth's Children," 12mo., $1.50. THROUGH MAROTSELAND A. ST. H. GIBBONS dren." 12mo., $1.50.

Everyone who read
"Elizabeth's Children" re members the delicious picture of child-life—as it were a tapestry of child-life with the golden thread of a mature romance inmitably interwoven. The author's pen has not lost its cunning. With num-rous illustra tions and maps. 2 vols. 8vo. Boxed, $7.50 n. t. ble addition to the litera-ture of African travel."— London Morning tost.

BEFORE THE CRISIS

A Novel

By F. B. Mott

12mo. $1.50

A picture of the stirring times on the Kansas border, after the National advance had crossed the Mississippi, when John Brown led in the prelimi nary duel of factions along the Osage and Osawatomie.

A LATER PEPYS

The Correspondence of Sir William Weller Pepys. Bart.. Master in Chancery, 1758 1825, with Mrs. Chapone, Mrs. Hartley, Mrs. Montagu, Hannah More, William Francs, Sir James Macdonal I. M. jor Rennell. Sir Nathaniel Wraxell, and others. Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by Alice C. C. Gaussen. With numerous illustrations. 8vo. 2 volumes, $7.50 net.

John Lane 3

Write for Fall Lists 67 Fifth Avenue 30

New York

SOME OF LITTLE, BROWN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

A book of original character drawing, quaint humor and homely philosophy.

SUSAN CLEGG AND HER FRIEND MRS. LATHROP

By Anne Warner, author of "A Woman's Will," etc. Illustrated, 227 pages, 12mo, $1.00.

The art book of the season

REMBRANDT'S ETCHINGS

Fifty full-page photogravures of Rembrandt's most notable etchings, printed on Dutch hand-mad-paper, with descriptive text by Philip Gilbert Hamerton, and annotated catalogue, etc., by Camobell Dodgson of the British Museum. Limited edition, crown folio, $30.00 net.

Italy and its People described

ROMA BEATA

Letters from the Eternal City, by Maud Howe, with illustrations from drawings and photographs. 8vo. $2.50 net.

By Jessie B. Rittenhouse, with selected poems, biographical data, and 12 portraits. 12mo, $1.50 net.

A special s'udu of a great policy

THE MONROE DOCTRINE

New Illustrated Edition of

D. G. ROSSETTI'S POEMS

Annotated by his brother, William Michael, Rossetti, printed from new type at the Astolat Priss on hind made caper, and illustrated with twenty full-page photogravure reproductions of paintings by Rossetti, 2 vols. Footscap 4to. Cloth, extra, $12,00 net.

A book of literary critician

THE YOUNGER AMERICAN POETS

New illustrated holitay edition

THE QLD MASTERS and Their Pictures

By T. B. EDGINGTON, A. M., of the Memphis Bar. 8vo, cloth, $3.00 net. By Sahah Tytler. With 20 full-page illustrations. 12mo. in box, $2.00.

Does each individual lead three lines on ear h? Read

THE LITTLE BOOK OF LIFE AFTER DEATH

By Gustav Theodor Fechner, translated from the German by Mary E. Wadsworth; with introduction by Professor William James, of Harvard. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

A SHORT CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES

By Francis Newron Thorpe. author of "A (State) Constitutional History of the American People, 1776-1850," "The Constitutional History of the United States, 1765-1895," etc. 12mo. Cloth, $1.75 net.

THE EXPANSION OF THE COMMON LAW

Lectures delivered to American law schools by Sin F. Pollocs, co-editor of "The English Law Before the Time of Edward I." 8vo. Cloth, $2.50 net.

AN INTRODUCTION TO PSYCHOLOGY

Based on the author's "Handbook of Psychology" By J. CLARK MURRY, LL D. F.R S.C., former Professor of Philosophy in McG li University, Montreal. A text-book for Colleges. 12mo. Cloth, $1.60

LIFE OF GEORGE ELIOT

By Mathilds Blind. New Plant rated Ettit n. with a critical estimate of her writings, Chapters on "George Eliot at Work," and "Her Friends and Home Life," together with a full "Bibliography." 12mo. Cloth, $1.25.

HANDY LIBRARY EDITIONS OF STANDARD NOVELISTS

New Issues: George Sands' Novels, 10 vols, with frontis, leces in photogravure and etchinz; Sanuel Loven's Novels, 4 vols, with photogravure frontispieces; La Comedie Humaine of Ho oré de Balzac, 39 vols, with photogravure frontispieces; Ten Thousand A Year, by Sanuel Warren, 3 vols, with frontispieces. Decorated cloth, $1.00 per vol.; half crushed morocco, $2.75 per vol.

SEND FOR COMPLETE LITTLE, BROWN & COMPANY BOSTON, MASS.

NEW BOOKS

SEND FOR ILLUSTRATED FALL CATALOGUE

BREAKING THE WILDERNESS

The story of the Conquest of the Far West, from the Wanderings of Cabeza de Vaca to the first Descent of the Colorado by Powell and the Completion of the Union Pacific Railway. With particular account of the exploits of trappers and traders.

By FREDERICK S. DELLENBAUGH, Author of "The Romance of the Colorado River," "North Americans of Yesterday," etc.

8vo. Fully Illustrated. Net $3.50. (Carriage 25 cents.)

While there have been numerous books published relating to various parts of this period, yet there appears to be no single volume which presents a comprehensive and concise view of the whole. It is intended that "Breaking the Wilderness" shall, in a measure, fill this place.

THE UNITED STATES 1607-1904

A History of Three Centuries of Progress in Population, Industry, Commerce, and Civilization.

By WILLIAM ESTABROOK CHANCELLOR and FLETCHER WILLIS HEWES

In 10 parts (each complete in one volume and sold separately).

Part 1. COLONIZATION, 1607-1697.

8vo, with 150 maps and diagrams (many in colors). Net $3.50. (Carriage 25 cents.)

The record of the settlement of the twelve English colonies of the 17th Gentury, preceded by a brief review of the period of discovery and settlement.

NARRAGANSETT BAY

Its Historic and Romantic Associations and Picturesque Setting.

By EDGAR MAYHEW BACON

Author of "The Hudson River from Ocean to Source," etc.

Large 8vo, with 50 drawings by the author and numerous photographs. Net $3.50. (Carriage 25 cents.)

Mr. Bacon presents in a form similar to his '" Hudson River," another volume emphasizing the unique beauty, the great historic interest, and the legendary charm of Rhode Island's noble bay.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, Poet and Thinker

By ELISABETH LUTHER CARY, Author of "The Rossettis," "William Morris," etc.

8vo, with numerous illustrations in Photogravure, uniform with Miss Cary's other works. Net $3.50. (By mail $3.75.)

Addressed not to the student, but to the general reader, this volume shows Emerson as he looks to the generation succeeding his own.

JAPANESE LIFE

In Town and Country
By GEO. W. KNOX

No. 2 in OUR ASIATIC NEIGHBORS 12mo, Illustrated. Net $1.20. (By mail $1.30.)

Previously Issued: Indian Life in Town and Country.

SWEDISH LIFE

In Town and Country

By G. VON HEIDENSTAM

No. 12 in OUR EUROPEAN NEIGHBORS. 12mo, Illustrated. Net $1.20.

(By mail $1.30.)

Just Issued:
Belgian Life in Town and Country.

MARJORIE FLEMING

The Story of Pet Marjorle, together with Her Journals and Her Letters.

By L. MacBEAN

To which is added

Marjorie Fleming, A Story of City Life Fifty Years Ago.

By JOHN BROWN, M.D.

With numerous illustrations, including a frontispiece in color.

PORTRAITS OF THE 17th CENTURY

Historic and Literary

By C. A. SAINTE-BEUVE Translated by Katharine P. Wormeley

Two parts, 8vo, with about 30 Illustrations. Sold separately, each $2.50 net.

The subjects of these brilliant essays include many of the most notable persons in the history and literature of France of the 17th Century.

THE MASTER'S VIOLIN

By MYRTLE REED
Author of "Lavender and Old Lace," etc.

12mo, very daintily printed and bound. Net $1.50. (By mail, $1.65.)

"A rare piece of work, an exquisite literary production, full of delicately woven fancy, tenderness and humor. A captivating love story."—Newark Advertiser.

Send for Illustrated Fall Catalogue G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS

NEW YORK AND LONDON

Illustrated Gift Books=1904

THE LOVE OF AZALEA

By ONOTO WATANNA

Author of

"A Japanese Nightingale," "The Heart of Hyacinth," etc. Illustrated with beautiful colored plates by a Japanese artist.

8vo. Illustrated. Net $2.00.

NATURE AND CULTURE

By HAMILTON W. MABIE

Author of

"My Study Fire," "In the Forest of Arden," etc. With page decorations. Illustrated with 24 full-page reproductions of nature studies.

8vo. Illustrated. Net $2.00.

LOVE FINDS THE WAY

LI'L' GAL

By PAUL LAURENCE DUNBAR

Author of

"Lyrics of Lowly Life," "Cabin and Field," etc.

With illustrations by Mr. Miner of the Hampton Institute Camera Club, and Marginal Decorations. Containing Negro dialect poems, etc.

> 8vo. Illustrated. Net $1.50.

By PAUL LEICESTER FORD

THACKERAY

IN THE UNITED STATES

By GEN. JAMES GRANT WILSON

Author of "Life of General Grant," "Bryant and His Travels," etc. Nearly 100 illustrations. Letters, portraits, drawings, etc. 15 portraits of Thackeray.

2 vols. 8vo.

Regular Edition Regular Edition -Japan Paper Edition limited to - Net $20.00 Author of

"Janice Meredith," "Wanted: A Match-maker," etc. With full-page illustrations in photogravure by HARRISON FISHER and elaborate decorations in many colors by MARGARET ARMSTRONG

A Colonial story of the "Janice Meredith" type.

8vo. Illustrated. $2.00.

OUR FRIEND THE DOG

By MAURICE MAETERLINCK

This is the first work of Maeterlinck having illustrations, there being several full-page plates and marginal decorations.

16mo. Illustrated. Net, $1.00.

SCROGGINS

By JOHN URI LLOYD

Author of "Stringtown on the Pike," etc. Numerous Illus-trations and decorations by REGINALD BIRCH.

Illustrated. $1.50.

THE NAUTICAL LAYS OF A LANDSMAN

By WALLACE IRWIN

Clever nonsense jingles with the amusing drawings of PETER NEWELL.

12mo. Illustrated. Net $1.00.

RAIDERLAND

By S. R. CROCKETT

Author of "The Lilac Sunbonnet," etc. With 100 Illustrations by JOSEPH PENNELL.

12mo. Illustrated. Net $2.00.

OUTLINES OF THE HISTORY OF ART

By DR. WILLIAM LUBKE

Edited, minutely revised, largely rewritten and brought up to the present time by RUSSELL STURGIS, A.M., Ph.D., F.A.I.A. Fully illustrated with 130 half-tone plates and 660 line cuts.

2 vols., 8vo. Net $10.00.

Dodd, Mead & Co., Publishers, Mew York

Thomas Y. Crowell & Co.'s New Publications

FOR THE FALL OF 1904—NEW BOOKS AND NEW EDITIONS

ADDISON

Essays

By J) 3 EP H ADDISON. With introduction by Hamilton Wright Mable. 31) pp. 18 no. cloth, 35 cents; timp leather, 75 cents; 12mo, cloth, plain, 60 cents; gilt top. 75 cents.

A new and careful selection of the fugitive writings of this renowned essayist, including the Sir Roger de Coveriey papers.

Pride and Prejudice

By JANE AUSTEN. Luxembourg Library. With 17 illustrations. 8vo, cloth, git top, $1.50.

This we'l-known author's masterpiece is now presented in a specially illustrated volume which should appeal to the reader.

BOLTON

Emerson and Raphael

By SARAH K, BOLTON. Chiswick Series. Euch with 8 illustrations. 12mb gitt top, per vol. 30 cents net. Postage, 5 cents.
Two popular brief biographies which are now embellished by full-page half-tones from photographs, see

BRADFORD

Messages of the Masters

By AMORY H. BRADFORD. Silent Times Series. Illustrated. 16mo, plain edges, 65 cents; gilt top, 85 cents net. Postage, 8 cents.

This book of appreciations of great paintings and their lessons has proved so helpful and popular sings; it was first issued a few months ago that a cheaper edition has been deemed desirable.

Dames and Daughters of the French Court (Reads in October)

By GERALDINE BROOK sau hor of "Dames and Daughters of Colonial Days." Hilustrated. 12mo. gdt top. $1.50 net. Postage, 15 cents.

Many interesting and picturesque figures cluster about the throne of France, and not a few of these "dames and daughters" exerted a wide effect upon history. The treatment of this attractive theme could not be in better hands than Miss Brooks's.

BUILWER-LYTTON

By EDWARD BULWER-LYTTON. Luxembourg Library. With 17 il ustrations. 8vo. cloth, gilt top. $1.50 Lord Lytton's popular story of the "Last of the Tribunes" is now added to our Luxembourg Series, with extra illustrations.

CHESTERFIELD

Letters to His Son and His

By LORD CHESTERFIELD. Selected and ed ted, with introduction and in lex by CHARLES WELSH, 380 pp., 18mp, cloth, 35 cents; limp leather, 75c; 12 no. cloth, plain, 80c; gl.t top, 75c.

Lord Che-terfi-id's lette's on deportment have made his name proverbial for polition as and breeding. Aside from that fact, they are characterized by good thought and literary charm.

Stories of King Arthur

As told in Malory's "Morte Darthur." Adapted, with introduction, by U. WALDO CUTLER. Children's Favorite Classics. 16mo, idustrated, 60 cents. Also bound in other styles, at various prices.

For centuries these fine old tales of chivalry have been prized by old and young alike. The present new version is based upon the Malory text and will be found of high merit.

The New Life

By DANTE ALIGHIERI. Translated by DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI. Chiswick Stries. Illustrated. 12mo. glit top. 50 costs not. Postage, 5 cents. The love story of Dante and Beatrice, as told by the "divine poet" himself, hiss been translated once for all by Rossetti. The illustrations are from Rossetti's drawings.

DE FOE

The Complete Works (In 16 Volumes)

Of DANIEL DE FOE. Edited by Gustavus Howard Maynadier, of Harvard University. With stehad frontispieces. 16 vols., 8vo., popular clott., $16.07; library clott., $20.00; library half leather, $24.00; library half calf., $40.00. Sold only in sets.

A noteworthy achievement is this first full printing of the works of "the first great realist." It includes not only the immortal "Robinson Crusoe," but his other great imaginative stories, travel sketches, scattered descriptions, and essays. The introductions and telltorial work are by Dr. Maynadier, who has also edited our Fielding and Smollett.

The Greek Poets

An anthology edited by NATHAN HASKELL DOLE. 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $2.00; half calf, $3.50; limp sea!, $4.50.

Mr. Dole's mature, scholarly work on "The Persian Poets" is here worthly followed by a highly important study of the place and value of all the Greek poets, with full examples of their writings, in the best English translation. The volume contains biographical sketches, notes, and indices.

Richard Wagner

By NATHAN HASKELL DOLE. Chiswick Series. With 8 illustrations, 12mo, gilt top, 50 ceats act. Postage, 5 cents.

A brief but clear story of the great musician's career, thoroughly illustrated from portraits and scenes.

Hundred Best English Poems

Selected by A. L. GOWANS. Handy volume, 18mo, cloth, 35 cents; limp leather, 75 cents; Astor edition, 12mo, cloth, 60 cents.

As the title indicates, this volu ne collects an I preserves the hundred greatest poems by writers of England. The collection should prove of service and interest to every lover of poetry.

Aucassin and Nicolette

Trans a'e l by ANDREW LANG. Chiswick Series. Illustrated. 12mo, glit top, 50 cents net. Postage, 5 cents.

The song story of Au as sin and Nicolette is one of the earliest and certainly the best of the old French mentrel romances. Its spirit and text are admirably preserved in this translation.

LE SAGE

Gil Blas

By ALAIN RENE LE SAGE. Trans. by Tobias Smollett Luxembourg Library. With 13 illustrations. 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $1.50. This famous book, with its scarcely less famous translation, is here embellished with illustrations from the French text.

Harry Lorrequer

By CHARLES LEVER. Luxembourg Library. With 17 illustrations. 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $1.50.

The popularity of Lever's great Iris's novel is perennial. The present text is extra illustrated from the drawings in the original edition by "Phiz," well known as Dickens's illustrator.

McSPADDEN

Stories of Robin Hood

And His Merry Outlaws. By J. WALKER McSPADDEN. Children's Favorite Classics. Illustrated. 330 pp., 16mo, 60 cents. Also bound in other styles. at various prices.

These merry tales in prose are based directly upon the old ballads which were popular in England for several centuries. An introduction is included, telling about the real Robin Hood.

Synopses of Dickens's Novels

By J. WALKER McSPADDEN. Handy Information Series. 230 pp., 18mo, cloth, 45 cents net. Postage, 5 cents.

A companion volume to "Shakeperian Synopses," and a work of no less practical utility. Each novel of Dickens is synopsized, and complete lists and index of characters are given for the first time.

SEND FOR OUR COMPLETE CATALOGUE

Thomas Y. Crowell & Co.'s New Publications Continued

MATTHEWS

Songs from the Dramatists

Edited by PROF. BRANDER MATTHEWS Text of Robert Bell. With Intro luctions and notes. 340 pp., 18mo, cloth, 35 cents; limp leather, 75 cents; 12mo, cloth, plain, 60 cents; gilt top, 75 cents.

For half a century this collection of songs has been a favorite with all lovers of the English lyric. It covers a wide array of writers, with brief blographical sketches, notes, and other aids to the readers.

MILLER

Finding the Way

By J. R. MILLER, D.D. 16mo, plain edges, 65 cents net; cloth, gilt top,

The Face of the Master

By J. R. MILLER, D D. Chiswick Series. 12mo, illustrated, decorated cover, gilt top, 50 cents net. Postage, 5 cents.

The Inner Life

By J. R. Miller, D. D. What Is Worth While Series, 12mo, illuminated cover, 30 cents net. Postage, 5 cents.

More than a milion copies of Dr. Miller's kindly helpful books have been issued, some of them being translated into several foreign tongues.

Poetical Works

Of WILLIAM MORRIS. Selected and edited by PROF. PERCY R. COLWELL, with introduction, notes, bibliography, and photogravure portrait. 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $2.00; half calf, $3.50; timp seal, $4.50. As a poet Morris ranks with Swinburue and Ros-setti among the chief ornaments of the Victoria era. These carefully selected poems will show him at his best, and will widen his circle of American readers.

How to Bring Up Our Boys

By S. A. NICOLL. What Is Worth While Series. 12mo, illuminated cover, 30 cents net. Postage, 5 cents.

Not vague theorizing or sermonizing, but straightforward hints from one who has had unusual opportunities in the bringing up of boys.

The Lost Art of Reading

By W. ROBERTSON NICOLL. What Is Worth While Series. 12mo, illuminated cover, 30 cents net. Postage, 5 cents. A forcible plea for higher literature and the moments of cultivated leisure too often forgotten in the work-a-day world of the present.

OMAR KHAYYAM

The Rubaiyat

Of OMAR KHAYYAM. Chiswick Series. With 8 illustrations. 12mo. gilt top, 50 cents net, Postage, 5 cents.

his text of the Rubaiyat deserves notice because of the quaint drawings ith which it is illustrated, the special type, and the binding.

RAWSON

Twenty Famous Naval Battles

By E. K. RAWSON, U. S. Navy Department. Illustrated with plans, old prints, maps, and portraits. 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

In answer to a general demand from readers this well-known book of battles, from Salamis to Santago,—a "Creasy on the Sea"—is now available in a single-volume edition, well privated and illustrated.

ROSSETTI

The Complete Poetical Works

Of DANTE GASRIEL ROSSETTI. With introduction and notes by W. M. Rossetti, and indices. Guadatone edition. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, 75

This is the first edition of Rossetti's poems to be fully indexed. It follows the authorized English text, is complete, and contains an introduction by the poet's brother, notes and indices.

SHAKESPEARE

Macbeth and Julius Cæsar

THE FIRST FOLIO EDITION

Edited by CHARLOTTE PORTER and HELEN A. CLAREE. "Handy volumes," with photogravure frontispieces and rubricated titles. Cloth, glit top, per volume, 50 cents net; limp leather, 75 cents net. Postage, 5c.

SHERIDAN

Comedies

Of RICHARD BRINSLEY SHERIDAN. Edited with introductions and notes by Brander Matthews. I vol., 18mo, cloth, 35c.; limp leather, 75c.; 12mo, cloth plain, 60c.; glit top, 75c.
"The Rivals" and "The School for Sandal" are considered the best comedies since Shakespeare. The two plays are here given in one volume, with full and scholarly editorial material.

SPENDER

A Browning Calendar

Edited by CONSTANCE M. SPENDER. Chiswick Series. Special type by the Merrymount Press. 12mo, gilt top, 50 cents net. Postage, 5 cents. A unique arrangement of selections from Robert Browning's poems, in calendar form—one for each day in the year.

STORM

Immensee

By THEODOR STORM. Chiswick Series. With 8 illustrations. 12mo, gilt top, 50 cents net. Postage, 5 cents.

A special printing of this beautiful German classic, with full-page half-tone illustrations of exceptional merit.

THACKERAY

The Complete Works (Cornhill Edition)

Of WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY. With biography, bibliography, and special introductions by William P. Thent, of Columbia University, and John Bell Henneman, of the University of the South. Fully illustrated. 30 vois. Nov. cloth, gilt top. $37.50; haif calf, gilt top. $75.00. Sold only in sets. Ready in October.

WARE

Zenobia

By WILLIAM WARE. Luxembourg Library. With 17 illustrations, 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $1.50.

The kingdom of Zenobia, Queen of Palmyra, has vanished, and even the great empire which caused har overthrow is but a memory; yet books like this will prove enduring a winesses to all future years. This edition gives a series of valuable photographs of the ruins of Palmyra.

NEW BOOKS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

BUTTERWORTH

Little Metacomet

By HEZEKIAH BUTTERWORTH. Twentieth Century Juveniles. Illustrated by Frank T. Merrill. 150 pp., 12mo, illuminated cloth, 60 cents net. Postage, 10 cents.

Little Metacomet was the son of King Philip, who waged fierce war upon the colonists of America. This story shows the brighter side of Indian life, picturing the small prince among the birds, snimals, and flowers of the New England woods.

HAWKES

Stories of the Good Greenwood

By CLAR INCE HAWKES, author of "The Little Foresters." Twentieth Century Juveniles. Fully illustrated by Charles Coreland. 150 pp. 19mo, illuminated cloth, 50c. net. Postage, 10c.

The children will be giad to follow this entertaining writer of nature again to the field and forest, as they have found him to be one of the best guides that could be secured. Here he tells many interesting tales of bird and beast and woodcraft.

LEONARD

It All Came True

By MARY F. LEONARD, author of "How the Two Ends Met." Twen tieth Century Juveniles. Iliustrated by Charles Copeland. 144 pp., 12mo, iliuminated cloth, 60 cents net. Postage, 10 cents.

A rich but lonely little girl is the "Princess" of this make-believe fairy story. She is rescued by the children next door, and other remarkable things happen

OTIS

Dorothy's Spy

By JAMES OTIS, author of "How the Twins Captured a Hessian."
Twentieth Century Juveniles. Illustrated by CLYDE O. DELAND. 164 pp., 12mo, illuminated cloth, 60 cents net. Postage, 10 cents.
An exciting story of the first Fourth of July, where two children see Washington's review in New York and King George's statue pulled down, and have an adventure with a red-coat.

SEND FOR OUR COMPLETE CATALOGUE

THE NEW MACMILLAN BOOKS

PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

Mr. LAFCADIO HEARN'S Japan

AN ATTEMPT AT INTERPRETATION

Cloth, $2.00 net (bostage 13c.)

The last, most serious, and most complete work of "the one who, above all others, was most capable, and most successful in giving us the fine flavor of Japanese civilization . . . It is not a matter of relating customs, giving illustrations, telling anecdotes, describing scenes. It is a much subtler effect . . . But the Japanese and the Westerner acquainted with the East alike testified to Mr. Hearn's rare interpretative gift, the subtlety of his sympathy and the effectiveness and fidelity of its expression."

-The Evening Post, Chicago.

Mr. Justin McCarthy's autobiography

An Irishman's Story

A representative Irishman, the well-known author of "A History of Our Own Times," tells this graphic and engaging story. He knew English politics thoroughly as a reporter of the House of Commons; his interests were wide, his connections with many public men were intimate, and his personality is delightful. Cloth, 8vo, $2.50 net (postage 17c.)

A new and enlarged edition, with five new chapters

Mr. Francis L. Wellman's The Art of Cross-Examination

"Quite as attractive as a new story by Conan Doyle."-Philadelphia Press.

Cloth, $2.50 net (postage 16c.)

"It is entertaining to a degree, even to men who know nothing about law."-NEW YORK TIMES.

By the Author of "The Real World," "The Web of Life," etc.

Mr. Robert Herrick's new novel is entitled

The Common Lot

Its first edition was exhausted by advance sales a week before the day of publication.

The book is an extremely interesting picture of the forces of corruption brought to bear upon a young architect. Through an interesting story it shows the corroding influences of greed and graft, the awakening shock of a great disaster, and his later growth. Cloth. $1.50

OTHER NEW NOVELS.

The Second Edition of

Mr. Mark Lee Luther's The Mastery

Cloth, $1.50

"If you like a good, meaty story, full of red blood and growing in vigor till the last word is said, we recommend this."—Cleveland Leader.

Mr. Upton Sinclair's novel Manassa₃

Cloth, $1.50

A tense, absorbing story of vigorous contrasts.

Mr. Laurence Housman's novel Sabrina Warham Cloth, $1.50

"Far out of the ordinary in interest, strength and scope,"—N. Y. Times. Second Edition.

READY NEXT WEEK

Mr. F. Marion Crawford's

new novel

Whosoever Shall Offend

is as full of romance and entertainment as was his last year's success. "The Heart of Rome." The central theme is the attempt of one man to undermine the health, moral and physical, of a lad who stands between him and a rich estate. Cloth, $1.50

Miss Gwendolen Overton's

new novel

Captains of the World is a strong addition to the list of industrial novels, being clear, interesting and unusually sane. Cloth, $1.50.

175th thousand

Mr. Winston Churchill's novel

The Crossing

"It is a genuine embodiment of the young life of a great people; the reader himself feels the joy of high-spirited Illustrated. Cloth, $1.50 adventure," says the London Academy.

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY, . THE MACMILLAN COMPANY, ... Published

The Nation.

NEW YORK, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1904.

The Week.

People who commented upon President Roosevelt's failure in Gen. Miles's case to take the usual official notice of the retirement of the General of the Army, said it betrayed a small-minded and unforgiving temper which they would not have suspected in him. But that inference did the President injustice. No one can question his native magnanimity after reading his telegram of condolence on occasion of Senator Hoar's death. It required a really lofty soul to overlook the fact that the Senator, in almost his last speech of any significance, thus characterized Theodore Roosevelt's dealings with Colombia:

"Now, Mr. President, I want to know— I think the American people want to know and have a right to know-whether this and nave a right to know whether this mighty policeman, instructed to keep the peace on that isthmus, seeing a man about to attack another, before he had struck his blow manacled the arms of the attacked so that he could not defend himself, leaving the assailant free, and then instantly pro-ceeded to secure from the assailant the pocketbook of the victim, on the ground that he was de facto the owner?

More Panama chickens are coming home to the White House to roost. Another emergency calling for quick thinking and prompt action is before the President. His own bantling Republic of Panama has filed a protest with the State Department, on account of the high-handed action of this Government in the canal zone. It alleges oppression and violation of the treaty, and asks that the matters in dispute be referred to the Hague Tribunal. It might seem difficult for Mr. Roosevelt, in his new rôle as pacificator mundi, to refuse so reasonable a request, especially as he is just about to summon the Hague Conference afresh; but it is already evident what sort of reply will be given to the pained Panamanians. The State Department has just explained pityingly to the Minister of Panama that arbitration is not for the likes of him. But, asks Minister Obaldia plaintively, is the Washington Administration to be both judge and jury, just because it is strong and Panama is weak? Si, Señor! After having robbed Colombia, do you suppose that this nation is going to let you have anything to say about our disposition of the booty?

The Republicans assure us that there is but one Roosevelt and that "two" is a slander. The approved maxims which he lays down as a candidate for the Presidency, are those which have alhis whole life. Secretary Hay on Monday, addressing the International Peace Conference in Boston, added a few touches to the Presidential portrait now enjoying the greatest popularity. "President Roosevelt," he said, "has the same tireless energy in the work of concord that he displayed when he sought peace and ensured it on the field of battle. No Presidents in our history," he added, coupling McKinley with Roosevelt, "have been so faithful and so efficient as the last two in the cause of arbitration and of every peaceful settlement of difficulties." "We shall continue to advocate and to carry into effect, as far as practicable, the principle of the arbitration of such questions as may not be settled through diplomatic negotiations." Now every good citizen must rejoice to hear such principles as these enunciated by a national administration, whatever its party complexion. What puzzles us is why, in nominating so conspicuous a man of peace, ex-Gov. Black should have gone out of his way to talk about war, a thing the mere thought of which is evidently abhorrent. Why, in celebrating the virtues of a life-long apostle of peace, should the epigrammatic orator have used the phrases he did? "You may talk of orderly tribunals." said he, "and learned referees; you may sing in your schools the gentle praises of the quiet life; you may strike from your book the last note of every martial anthem, and yet out in the smoke and thunder will always be the tramp of horses and the silent, rigid. upturned faces." If we are to accept Mr. Hay's estimate of the President, all this was not only a disagreeable picture, but absolutely irrelevant.

People who take their politics from bill-boards and cartoons and bawled headlines will naturally protest that they cannot read all of the letter by Carl Schurz, as printed in the Evening Post of Monday; and it is perhaps over long. It contains, however, matter of the highest importance, set forth with singular fair-mindedness and literary skill. The weight of his long experience and honorable reputation goes with all that Mr. Schurz writes; and this statement of his, though it may be attacked by many, will be asserted by no one to be the work of a partisan or dishonest mind. Republicans who have hailed Mr. Schurz's adhesion to their cause, in those political contests when he has sided with them, cannot with any grace sneer at him now, or discount his influence with men who choose their political company by conviction more than by prejudice. The analysis of President Roosevelt's character is made by ways filled his thoughts and animated | Mr. Schurz with an impartiality and | keenness of discrimination which call for especial admiration.

The tobacco-stamp decision, though it concedes a little to the Trust, is on the whole in favor of the "independents." The "large red stamp" is to be red, but not large, and is to be put on the bottom of the box. The arguments in support of the decision are, be it noted, those advanced by the "independents." They protested that in practice the stamp was used as a trade-mark to advertise the imported goods. President Roosevelt, as his view is expounded by the Secretary of the Treasury, holds:

"The Government's business is to collect the revenue and to provide as far as pos-sible against fraud; but it is not the Government's business to furnish a guaranty in the form of a trade-mark for the benefit of the goods. This should be left in the tobacco business exactly as it is in all other

Back of this conclusion stands a glittering aggregation of talent, as the late Mr. Barnum would have said: the Secretary of the Treasury and two of his assistants, the Solicitor of the Treasury, Attorney-General Moody, and the President of the United States. From the unanimous opinion of these dignitaries no one except the Tobacco Trust is likely to dissent. The "independents" and their 250,000 votes and eight Congressional districts-or was it twentyeight in their last outgiving?-are presumably happy.

In view of the awkward position of Republican orators and organs, called on to explain the $23,000,000 deficiency in the Government's revenues for the first two months of the fiscal year, it is natural that they should greet with jubilation the news of a $5,800,000 surplus for September. It is true that the same month in 1903 yielded a surplus revenue of $6,300,000, and in 1902 one of $11,000,000. But there is, at all events, a surplus, and it may be that the turn of the tide is close at hand. Receipts by the Government, last month, ran beyond those of 1903-which has not happened since February. Expenditure increased, to be sure, more rapidly than income; but expenditure can sometimes be temporarily held in check. Even so, the Government's accounts will not provide very great comfort to Administration orators. October interest payments, footing up something like $4,000,000, cannot be deferred; it is not easy to keep down the drafts of the Navy Department, with the year's much larger appropriations on the books, and even last October there was a deficit of nearly $5,000,000. If last year's results were to be duplicated, election day would be approached with a deficit, for the four completed months of the fiscal year, amounting to something like $23,000,000. The Secretary of the Treasury, last December, estimated that the deficit for the full fiscal year 1905 would be just this sum. To escape exceeding even that far from optimistic estimate, it would be necessary to have no more excess of expenditure between election day and July first.

Despite confident announcements, the Fall River mills did not open on Monday. That city-formerly so bustlingis to be given still further opportunity to reflect on President Roosevelt's dictum that wages were never higher. Its mills are shut up, its merchants are losing money, and the men in the stores are being thrown out of jobs. All this is because the cotton-mill operatives are a little slower in recognizing that times have changed than other classes of labor have been. A good many mills of all kinds have been starting up lately because the employees have concluded to accept lower wages and talk less about the rights of unions. A heavy demand for cotton goods might bring victory to the Fall River operatives, but this is not yet in sight. Despite Republican prosperity, consumers think twice before paying high prices for cottons. If the mills are going to do any business, they must economize, just as those in a great many other industries have had to do. Cotton manufacturing is at present waiting, like every other business, for the country to catch up with its extraordinary expansion of the last six years. If the cut in wages' is accepted in Fall River, it will undoubtedly be applied throughout New England. Perhaps that will be the result of the conference which, it is said, will shortly be held to settle the strike.

Gov. Odell is serving at least one useful purpose. He shows what the fate of a boss would be who should dare ask the voters to say what they think of him. Bosses know better than to submit themselves to a popular election. At any time when Platt was acclaimed as the undisputed leader of his party in this State, notoriously he could not have been elected to the humblest public office. This he well knew, and wisely stuck to his machine and his bondslaves in the Legislature. But Odell has done his best to make himself the chief issue in this State campaign. Poor Mr. Higgins has thus far been so pushed into the background that, if he does not emerge soon, people will think that it is Odell who is the Republican candidate for Governor. Odell is making his wonderful card indexes of voters and appointing deputy leaders and exercising every art of the political manager in order-to elect Mr. Higgins? No, to vindicate himself. But the gathering clouds show what sort of storm is going to burst upon the boss who seeks a vindication at the ballot-box. We wish all the bosses would "try it on" in the Odell fashion, so that they, too, might get the popular verdict upon their manners and morals.

If we may judge by the space devoted to it in Western newspapers, the Mormon question will play a very important part in the politics of the Rocky Mountain States this year. The new third party in Utah, calling itself the "American party," has decided to nominate candidates of its own for all offices except Presidential electors and members of the judiciary. Meanwhile, Senator Kearns, one of the most prominent men in the new movement, in order to show that his attack on "Smootism" is disinterested, has announced that he will not be a candidate for re-Nothing shows better the election. curious position of the two parties towards the Mormon Church than the fact that at the initial mass meeting of Gentiles at Salt Lake City, where Republicans were the moving spirits, the most vigorous and effective speaker was the Democratic Senator from Idaho, Mr. Dubois. In Idaho his party is making a strenuous fight against Church domination, while the other ignores it as an issue. In Utah, since the Mormon Senator demonstrated his control over the Republican organization, a professedly non-partisan anti-Mormon movement has begun, while the Democrats keep quiet and hope at heart that the solid Church vote will not be cast against them. In Wyoming, a polygamous Mormon has just resigned as a Republican Presidential elector. But for the Smoot hearings before the Senate committee last winter, it is hardly probable that agitation would have taken this form. Unquestionably the most effective anti-Mormon document put forth in years is President Smith's admission that if Apostle Smoot had run for the Senate without the Church's permission, he would have been considered "out of harmony with his quorum."

Reports from Vermont tell of an organized and powerful movement for the repeal of the license law passed two years ago, and this will be one of the important questions before the Legislature which assembled on Tuesday, though the party in power has pledged itself to another two years' trial of the law. It is evident that there has been a decided reaction from the temporary enthusiasm in which the State overthrew the long-standing prohibitory law. Forty-four towns which voted "yes" two years ago, voted "no" this year, while only one changed from no license to license. Most of the towns still for license declared for it by reduced majorities. At that to say that license has failed in any number of localities is a very different thing from saying that the local-option law is a failure as compared with statutory prohibition. It is a good thing that these forty-four towns have seen their way to get rid of the saloon through the movement of their own public sentiment-much better for the cause of morality and sound government than if the same places were compelled to reform because other towns outvoted them. The Southern States present to-day the largest stretches of "dry" territory in the country, though not one of them has State prohibition. Local sentiment has brought about a gradual extension of no-license territory, until in such a State as Tennessee the sale of liquor is confined to less than a dozen of the larger cities. If every town and city of Vermont should vote "dry" at the next election, it would not necessarily be an argument for going back to statutory prohibition.

Secretary Taft's order that the Chicago River tunnels must be lowered before April, 1906, so as not to interfere with navigation, is a step in one of the most extraordinary campaigns ever taken against a municipal nuisance. The tunnels effectually blocked the river to vessels of any great draught, and agitation to have them lowered has been intermittent for many years. One local authority after another was appealed to, without result. As a last resort the city applied to the Federal Government, not for the usual financial aid in improving a river for navigation, but for drastic action. Representatives from the city of Chicago introduced at the last session of Congress and pushed through a bill authorizing the Secretary of War to declare the tunnels an obstruction to navigation, and impose a heavy fine for every month of their maintenance. "I find that I have not the moral resolution to do right of my own accord and remove those tunnels," the city said, in effect; "I therefore beg that you threaten me and if necessary punish me until I do." The rod is to be applied by request of the naughty boy. It was a novel enough way of going about a reform and may prove to be effective; yet we fancy that the city would have been up in arms had the initiative come from without.

The Evening Post's Washington correspondent pertinently suggests that there should be some organization akin to the Indian Rights Association with the object of supplying accurate news from the Philippines. As it is now, the people of this country must depend for their information largely on the reports of officials, most of whom are directly interested in representing the situation as paradisaical. President Roosevelt dethe same time, it must not be forgotten clares the insular government a model, and Secretary Taft does not dissent when his enthusiastic superior compares him to Cromer, Milner, and other great colonial lights. Governor Wright's only trouble is the pesky Americans (Mr. Roosevelt included) who will upset the Filipinos by talking of their independence. But outside of official circles there is a very great difference of opinion. The military men in the islands can see nothing in the future save bloodshed and unceasing strife. The American newspapers and business men in Manila cannot sufficiently express their contempt for the commission and all its works, while intelligent foreigners, like John Foreman, consider our experiment a practical failure thus far. Surely, there ought to be some means of getting news of the islands which is absolutely non-partisan and accurate, leaning neither towards the Civil Commission, the army, nor the merchants whose cry is the Philippines for the Americans. If something of this kind is not done, the public must continue to be misled or deceived.

American consuls in Europe are now busy participating in a symposium on "dumping." The views of our representatives at London, Glasgow, and Edinburgh were published on Thursday. These, according to high protectionist authority, strikingly demonstrate the 'inadequacy" of the Democratic argument that the tariff should be lowered to keen American manufacturers from selling cheaper abroad than at home. The British, it seems, keep up the home market and cut prices to foreigners, just like our own Trusts. Such is the conclusion drawn from the following statement of our consul at Glasgow: "Surplus stocks are avoided, even to the extent of closing the works. However, if there is a surplus, 'odds and ends,' it is exported at reduced prices." The consul-general at London is "quite convinced" that concessions are made to foreign buyers, but he slips up when it comes to furnishing proof. The best he can do is to cite the "dumping" of several hundred copies of a book which "did not sell as well as expected" at home. No doubt the British manufacturer cuts prices abroad when he finds he has miscalculated the market, but nothing is said by our consuls to contradict the plain inference of the report recently issued by Mr. Chamberlain's tariff commission-namely, that the "dumping" methods of Germany and the United States are something English and Scotch manufacturers have yet to be educated up to. That is why the Hon. Joseph wants a protective tariff. It doesn't make a particle of difference how big your loss is abroad, if you can only make your friends and neighbors at home foot the bill. That is one difference between the British and the American "dumper"; the latter can hide behind a protective tariff.

a protest with the British Foreign Office against the treatment of thirteen American negroes in the Transvaal. They have not been allowed to travel in second-class railway carriages, or to walk on the side-paths (which seem to be reserved exclusively for the whites), or to start in business. It will, unfortunately, not be difficult for the Foreign Office, if it sees fit, to send our consul some countervailing facts about the treatment of negroes south of Mason and Dixon's line. with a few references to our "Jim Crow" cars. Sensitive Southerners will, of course, see in all this merely another Republican bid for the negro vote. The English Liberals are citing it as proof of their contention that Mr. Chamberlain's moving indignation on account of the outrageous treatment of the Kaffirs by the Boers was pumped up. Lord Lansdowne, in the days before the war, declared that, "among the many misdeeds of the South African Republic, he did not know of any that filled him with more indignation than its treatment of the Queen's Indian subjects." Lord Salisbury's war cry was: "Equal rights for men of all races." The wrongs of the poor Kaffirs were dwelt upon by any number of humbugging Imperialistic orators, who now pay no attention to the appeals of British Indians, American negroes, and Zulus for the restoration of the good old times of President Kruger.

Sir William Harcourt enjoyed in England, and particularly in the House of Commons, a repute not unlike that of Senator Hoar in this country. He was the representative of an elder day not only in years, but in his entire conception of public life. The ways of the wire-puller and the mealy-mouthed politician he could never make his own. A formidable debater, he spoke not for the passing fad of the hour, but for a consistent body of principles which he had thought out and was prepared resolutely to defend. In all that related to finance and fiscal policy he was a master, and nobody would have been better able to pulverize Mr. Chamberlain's contentions. Hence Sir William's disappearance from the scene at this juncture will make his loss doubly felt. Uncompromising in public life, and above the art of being all things to all men, he was not a popular leader of his party; but in private his charm was great. His learning and wit and knowledge of the world made him much in demand socially. One has only to read George Russell's stories of his bright sayings to see that he was as deft in the swordsmanship of repartee as he was overpowering in his use of the Nasmyth hammer in public debate,

The Japanese movement before Mukden is unquestionably the hugest manœuvre ever undertaken by a modern army.

Our consul at Pretoria recently lodged A front sixty miles long has hitherto been unheard of in military annals, and raises at once some very interesting questions. Can an army extended over such a distance be successfully commanded by one human being? The size of a regiment has been limited by what is considered the capacity of a colonel. just as the size of a squadron of cavalry has practically been fixed by the physical inability of a captain to control more than a given number of horsemen. If Ovama can really manguire four armies as one, keep them in touch on plain and mountain, and prevent the line from developing a fatal weakness at any critical point, the art of warfare must certainly have advanced. The Japanese are said to be very strong in their field telegraph and in their planning in advance for every detail of a battle; but the failure of the smaller enveloping movement at Liaovang makes it probable that Oyama will again have to content himself with a strategic success rather than the capture or annihilation of Kuropatkin's forces. Whether Kuroki is once more to bear the brunt of the turning movement on the east, or whether Oyama will turn to the plains on the west as the best means of striking the Russians, has not yet been clearly developed.

> Japan's resort to a third internal loan -this time of forty millions of dollars-shows how rapidly her war burdens are beginning to pile up. A military expert, writing in the London Times, roughly estimates her daily war expenditure at $500,000, or $15,000,000 a month. This is obviously guesswork, particularly as no accurate information as to the number and pay of the Japanese reserves now being called into service is obtainable. One of the heavlest items is the cost of coolie transportation in Mantchuria -- paid in hard cash -and this expense steadily increases the further the Japanese armies penetrate into Mantchuria. It is only a question of time before Japan must again enter the market for a foreign loan, this time with her railroads as a pledge instead of her customs, and there are those who believe that her recent victories will enable her to obtain better terms than when she negotiated her previous loan, which was concluded before her armies had successfully crossed the Yalu. As for Russia, the writer in the Times remarks that her "finance is a much too tangled skein for any one to unravel who is not to the manner born." M. Lévy, the French expert, calculated in June that the direct cost of the war for Russia was between thirty and thirty-five millions monthly. This must have been increased since then, owing to the mobilization of the additional army corps and the recent disasters, so that forty millions a month is now a conservative estimate of the actual expenditure.

GEORGE FRISBIE HOAR.

When the United States Senate comes to pay its customary tribute to the departed senior member from Massachusetts, it can unanimously praise one who for twenty years defended it against the charge of decadence and growing disrepute. Mr. Hoar did more than that: he resented with asperity attempts to bring the force of public opinion to bear upon that body by petitions and the like-as in the case of the ill-fated Olney-Pauncefote arbitration treaty of 1897. Loyalty such as this will have its official reward; and it will also be remembered, to the credit of Mr. Hoar's heart if not of his authority as a Constitutional lawyer, that he insisted on the right of every State to be represented continuously in the Senate. He abhorred a vacuum in his favorite club; and when the occasion arose in Quay's case in 1899, he stoutly stood up for the legality of the appointment (really a self-appointment, the Governor of Pennsylvania being Quay's creature), though the Senate eventually unseated Quay. This was to be more papist than the Pope, but the excess of zeal in behalf of a full Senate could only be regarded as flattering. Courteous himself, Mr. Hoar did nothing to impair the sacred "courtesy" of the Senate. One tiny fly may, by the too critical, be detected in this pot of ointment, for Mr. Hoar had some wise and weighty words of protest against his beloved McKinley's forestalling independent action of the Senate by appointing its members on important commissions, afterwards to be reviewed by them in their seats.

Individual brother Senators will, of course, bring especial palms. Aldrich will lament the passionate devotee of protection, whom nothing could induce to let Canadian fish enter our ports free. Lodge, reflecting with a sigh on Mr. Hoar's having called the public to witness that he had always voted the same way as his junior colleague, will laud his righteous abhorrence of the independent voter, and dwell on their paternal and filial relations unmarred by Lodge's having-in Everett's pregnant phrase-changed not his mind, but his soul. Spooner will reveal the admirable quality in Mr. Hoar which reconciled right and intense feeling contra with sheepish voting pro, as in the case of the Panama treaty. Platt will attest Mr. Hoar's commendable coolness towards civil-service reform, while preserving a discreet silence as to his objection to the political assessment of office-holders. Some one may claim a crown for him for supporting (nearly at the expense of his reëlection) the River and Harbor bill vainly vetoed by President Arthur in 1882. More than one will rise up and call him blessed for having helped enact the Arrears-of-Pensions bill.

All his good, we fear, will not be spoken of in the chamber which he has quitted. Before entering it from the House of Representatives he had been faithful in exposing the corruption of the Grant régime. His speeches on the Philippine and the Panama iniquities will remain his noblest monument. He worked hard but uselessly to eliminate the word "cede" from the Paris Treaty with Spain; he inserted in the Military Appropriation bill a statesmanlike provision against the sale and lease of public lands in the Philippines except as regulated. His judgment of our treatment of Colombia will be that of posterity, and no one more truly and fervently brought our Imperialism to book with the Declaration and the Constitution. Yet he denounced President Cleveland for his reversal of the collusive revolution in Hawaii, designed to precipitate annexation, and excused this defection from his own anti-Imperial principles by pointing to the lax morals of Queen Liliuokalani and to the scanty population of the archipelago-"it was a very little one." Towards Cleveland, the validity of whose election he challenged, he was never either fair or generous or anything but partisan, unless in the single matter of the Presidential Succession bill, which he was willing to have inure, if need be, to the benefit of any Democratic Administration deprived of its head. His whole Senatorial career, at least, was marked by a confusion of thought and an inconsistency of action truly remarkable in a man of such natural gifts and training as Mr. Hoar. His economic deliverances were nothing less than naïf, and in general he displayed a lack of humor that belied his relationship to his brother, the Judge.

When the Judge was contesting Republican support in Massachusetts against Butler in 1876, he did not, though a bolter, forfeit the assistance of Mr. George Hoar, then a Representative in Congress. But the latter could not abide bolting in Theodore Lyman, running as a civil-service-reform candidate in 1882. On Butler's election as Governor of Massachusetts and triumphant appearance ex officio at the Harvard Commencement, Mr. Hoar, though president of the alumni, refused to walk in the procession. On the other hand, having shown up in blistering terms our un-American offence against the Filipinos, he not only maintained his attachment for McKinley, but, still as president of the alumni, constrained the Harvard authorities to offer the President an honorary degree, which only by accident of non-attendance went unbestowed. He may be said to have atoned for this in some measure by his refusal to deliver a memorial address in eulogy of McKinley to his Worcester fellow-citizens; but this refusal was really a sur-Senator Hoar's complacency and optimism were inexhaustible. He was never troubled by the great change which came over the composition of the Senate in his time. He was blind to the corruption of his party, being able to divorce, in his conception, the rank and file of the voters from the machine whose encroachments have perverted the Constitutional scheme of election to both houses of Congress. In the Republican rank and file he saw the hope of the country, and to that end he was a Republican first, last, and all the time. "He was prepared," he said, "to serve God in the minority rather than Baal with the Democrats and Mugwumps, even though they were in the majority." He never could realize that the Republican party had been fossilized by Protection: much less that the Democratic party alone contained within itself a self-reformatory element -though he had twice witnessed the miracle of that element compelling a victorious support from the baser, and passed away in the midst of what we hope will be a third example, begun by the nomination of Parker.

In point of family-or what we should prefer to call sound New England stock-of intellectual, legal, and legislative training, scholarly and oratorical distinction, personal dignity and amiability, and faithful application to the duties of his office. Senator Hoar worthily filled the chair of Webster and of Sumner. We would not say that he cannot, in these aspects, be replaced, but it will be with difficulty. He himself did nothing to make it easy by contending against that slavish party discipline which relegates to private life men of cultivation and political aptitude. but too original, erect, and self-respecting for party requirements. On the other hand, plenty of politicians can be found who may be relied on to vote regularly under party dictation, with or without the privilege of high-minded, eloquent, and convincing outbursts against the course eventually acquiesced in.

A CANDID REPUBLICAN.

In the October Atlantic Representative McCall discusses "The Issues of the Campaign" from a "Republican Point of View." His article, by its remarkable freedom from partisan bias and its frank and truthful estimate of men and measures, certainly stands far above the run of political writing. Mr. McCall has fairly earned the liberty of speech which he enjoys and exercises. His hold upon the Eighth District of Massachusettsone of the most intelligent in the State -has only been strengthened by his independent attitude. The more muttering there has been about his plainspeaking and honest voting, and the direr the threats of the Lodge machine to punish him for insubordination, the more steadfastly his constituents have stood by him. Elected for six successive terms, his latest plurality was nearly 7,000.

An author and student as well as a Congressman, Mr. McCall writes with the impartiality of an historian. His calm verdict upon the struggle for the gold standard makes kindling wood of the Republican platform, and reduces much Republican oratory on that subject to mendacity. After showing how his own party was too much responsible for the financial difficulties which threatened to submerge us in 1893, Congressman McCall asserts that it was President Cleveland who "heroically performed the task" of laying "a secure foundation for the national credit." One passage we must quote:

"It is not a difficult thing to be a patriot on dress parade, to the music of bands and amid the popular acclaim. One can be that while sacrificing the people to their own momentary errors. Mr. Cleveland was not that sort of patriot. He was never a great favorite with the gallery. But in unflinching pursuit of a really patriotic purpose, in bravely incurring the odlum involved in the performance of a pressing public duty—a duty the discharge of which was of momentous consequence to the country—it would not be easy in the history of all our Presidents to find a parallel to Mr. Cleveland's conduct at this particular crisis. But his heroism proved for the time being his undoing. He saved the gold standard, but he lost his party."

Men who try to be as candid as Mr. McCall must admit that his argument against the Democratic party, drawn from its desertion and execration of its President at that great national crisis, has much weight. He fears that the party would, in a similar emergency, fall away from Judge Parker. That candidate Mr. McCall recognizes as "a man of courage and independence," and remarks that his qualities would not be "out of place in the Presidential office"; but he points out the danger of a breach with his party as befell Mr. Cleveland. It is a result, we must concede, not impossible, though it is both possible and probable that Judge Parker has a talent for winning over opponents not possessed by the ruggeder Cleveland. It is wholly conceivable, therefore, that in a perilous juncture he would stand as immovable as his rock-like predecessor. while yet able to conciliate and harmonize the various elements of his party.

The Massachusetts Congressman's references to the tariff are well-nigh sacrilegious. To the Home Market Club they will seem a stumbling-block and to the stand-patters foolishness. Tariff revision must speedily come, affirms Mr. Mc-Call. If it be said that the Democrats threaten a radical revision, disturbing to business, he declares that "between a radical revision and no revision at all, the former is preferable." If some schedules are not soon changed, they will "impose the payment of a tribute as directly as if that were the declared purpose of the law," and "the plunder and confiscation of to-day become the vested interests of to-morrow." This is simply awful, coming from a Republican, but worse is to follow. Mr. McCall actually ventures to hold an opinion differing from President Roosevelt's! He says that it "cannot seriously be contended" that the tariff has not a direct relation with Trusts. This is a cruel characterization of Mr. Roosevelt's serious contention in his letter of acceptance, and may bring down upon Mr. McCall the President's charge that no man who talks about attacking Trusts by means of tariff reduction can be an earnest enemy of the Trusts. Yet the Congressman is ready with the rejoinder, since he says of Mr. Roosevelt's famous anti-Trust proceedings: "It may be questioned whether they have abated by a single farthing the profits which the Trusts have wrung from the people."

On the whole question of Imperialism and the Philippine policy, Congressman McCall reaffirms his well-known views. He says that if President Roosevelt's language means anything, it means that he believes in the "ultimate independence" of the Filipinos. One of his sound remarks is: "We must change our relations with the Philippines or readjust our system of taxation." The venture that was to result in immense profit has really proved a frightful drain. "Our revenue," says this Republican member of the Ways and Means Committee, "is insufficient to support us with our colonial appendages." Of President Roosevelt's "fine public spirit" and "high ideals of government," Mr. McCall speaks approvingly, but indulges in something like mirth at "that creature of carnage and war, of blood and iron," which is the offspring of the "imagination of some of his eulogists." Indeed, for all the swaggering about the Spanish war-"a war between a cripple and a Colossus"-Mr. McCall has only contempt. "After a half-dozen years of boastful exaggeration and 'world-power' fustian, which have brought us to the point of bullying and beating our little brothers among nations, the time has come for the republic to resume its serenity."

Foolish or bigoted Republicans will denounce Mr. McCall as a traitor to his party. Even ordinarily sensible Republicans may pray to be delivered from such a candid friend, with a residential election pending, and may accuse the Atlantic of malice in selecting such a champion of the Republican cause when it might easily have got a writer who would have cried up Republican policies to the skies, but whom nobody would read. Yet if Republicanism has any future, it lies with honest men who stand erect and speak the thing they will, whether girt by friend or foe. And if Massachusetts Republicanism knew the things that make for its own peace, it would be thinking of a successor to Senator Hoar, not in the person of a moneybags or a satellite of Lodge, but in such a man as Samuel Walker McCall.

ROOSEVELT'S PHILIPPINE INCON-SISTENCIES.

Scornful as he is of the ability, courage, and consistency of his opponents, nothing quite so aroused President Roosevelt's indignation, in his letter of acceptance, as their uncertainty on the Philippine question. He referred with the utmost contempt to "their Irreconcilable differences of opinion," their proved inability to create a conservative policy," and "their readiness for the sake of expediency" to abandon principles. The Democrats, he asserted, had occupied three different positions within fifty days, and one of them, self-government by the Filipinos, was an impudent annexation from Mr. Roosevelt himself.

The President's sarcastic references to the divisions in the ranks of the Democratic party are particularly delightful when one thinks of the good Republicans like Senator Hoar, Congressman McCall, ex-Gov. Boutwell, Justice Brewer, and many others who felt bitterly outraged by the forcible subjugation of the Filipinos. And when it comes to the ability of a party to create a definite policy, we may well ask: What is the Republican plan in regard to the islands? There are many Roosevelt partisans who declare that any one who should haul down the flag in the Philippines ought to be shot as a rebel. Gen. W. H. Carter, a Roosevelt appointee commanding the department of the Visayas, complains in his official report that the present lawlessness of the Filipinos "will delay their ultimate Americanization," and protests that temporary barracks "only serve to develop and confirm in the minds of Filipinos the idea that Americans do not intend to hold the islands permanently. President Schurman, on the other hand, speaks and works for an early independence, while Secretary Taft talks of independence as wholly remote and practically impossible. The Republican platform, ignoring the wishes of hundreds of Republican professors, college presidents, and clergymen, remained silent upon the question of the future disposition of the archipelago.

This state of affairs alone, it would seem, might have deterred the President from indulging in such irony at the expense of his political adversaries. It might have occurred to him, too, that somebody would take the trouble to run over the expressions of opinion in his own multitudinous speeches since 1898, and call attention to the very large-sized beam in his own eye. For instance, on August 31, 1899, Governor Roosevelt declared to his hearers that "The right of justice and of equality before the law must be established there [in the Philippines], and then it is our duty to build up by degrees, as rapidly as possible, a spirit of manly independence and self-reliance, without which free institutions cannot exist." A year later, this present-day advocate of selfgovernment for the Filipinos said in his letter of acceptance of the Vice-Presidential nomination (September 15): "To grant self-government to Luzon under Aguinaldo would be like granting selfgovernment to an Apache reservation under some local chief." Lest anybody should misunderstand this, he made his position perfectly clear twenty-three days later by thus preaching the doctrine of perpetual control of the archipelago: "We cannot in honor shirk our work in the Philippines. . . . We are there, and we have got to stay."

On Memorial Day of 1902 the peaceful spirit was once more supreme in Roosevelt's breast, and, under its enervating influence, he took what he would have characterized two years earlier as a "step backward" by expressing the following most admirable sentiments: "Peace and freedom-are there two better objects for which a soldier can fight? These are precisely the objects for which our soldiers are fighting in the Philippines." And he proceeded to give aid and comfort to Aguinaldo and all the insurrectos by repeating that "our armies do more than bring peace, do more than bring order. They bring freedom." In this same address he used the words national independence in connection with the Filipinos, and went on to assert that when the Filipinos have "shown their capacity for real freedom by their power of self-government, then, and not till then, will it be possible to decide whether they are to exist independently of us or be knit to us by ties of common friendship and interest." On July 27 of the present year, in his speech of acceptance. Mr. Roosevelt came back to the self-government idea once more by stating: "We have established in the islands a government by Americans, assisted by Filipinos. We are steadily striving to transform this into self-government by the Filipinos, assisted by Americaas." Previously he had declared in his "Big Stick" letter that "It is not true that the United States has any land-hunger." So here this model of consistency rests to-day, on the question of independence.

As to our motives in the islands, Mr. Roosevelt's opinions are similarly varied. At Lawrence, Mass., on August 26, 1902, his view was: "Now we will govern the islands well. We will govern them primarily in their interests, but in our interests also." In April, 1903, he asserted that "The government is conducted purely in the interests of the people of the islands." Contrariwise, in 1900, after likening the Filipinos to Apaches, he dayed to say: "What the Boxers have done in China would have been done by the followers of Aguinaldo if it had not been for the firmness of President McKinley and those who have stood by him in the last two years." Last year these opinions were quite forgotten. Then, while extolling Gov. Taft and his associates, he affirmed that "With them and under them we have associated the best men among the Filipinos, so that the great majority of the officials, including many of the highest rank, are themselves natives of the islands. The administration is incorruptibly honest; Justice is as jealously safeguarded as here at home." Yet everybody knows that more than three-fourths of the native officeholders of to-day are the same savages who fought us from 1898 to 1900. What a marvellous triumph for civilization!

This confuting of Roosevelt out of the mouth of Roosevelt could be continued much further. But these instances suffice to show his lack of clear thought and his want of statesmanlike policy based on principle. And who so rash as to predict where Mr. Roosevelt will stand a year or two hence if reëlected?

OUR ELECTION AUGURS.

In printing a critical acticle on the art of prophecy, the London Spectator did not perhaps realize that it was offering anything especially timely. But on this side of the water, where few days pass without a prediction by somebody in authority that some particular State is about to give some particular majority for some particular candidate, the subject is particularly suited to the season. An important element in any political campaign is its "atmosphere"; and one of the ways of putting heart into the workers and winning over doubters is to carry out the maxim, "Claim everything."

He would, in truth, be a strange sort of political manager who should stand up before the votes were counted and admit, in so many words, that the election was lost. We expect the Republicans to receive news from the Gulf States, as Mr. Dooley said, "so encouraging as to be almost incredible, or quite so," A prophecy of victory is always regarded as most effective when it is most specific. When a man of reputed sagacity gives his name to an exact numerical forecast of results, it almost compels conviction. Yet even such careful and conscientious anticipations sometimes go wrong.

It takes only a few minutes of browsing through newspaper files of twelve years ago to find the exact counterparts of the glib prophecies of to-day. Then, as now, the note of absolute conviction could be heard from every oracle, Senator Hiscock started on a Western trip at about this season, and, to an interviewer at Chicago, remarked that "New York will give Harrison about the same plurality that he had in 1888." Harrison's plurality was 14,000. Two months after the prediction, the State gave Cleveland 46,000 plurality. Two weeks before election, the optimism of the party carried the national executive committee to the point of sending out a semi-official telegram claiming New York by 20,000. This was signed by such astute politicians as Chairman Carter, and Messrs, McComas and Bliss. In other States, the Republican confidence displayed itself even more strikingly. Ex-Governor, now Senator, Foraker declared in mid-October that there was no trouble about carrying Indiana, State Chairman Gowdy, after a "careful analysis," declared "Indiana is safely Republican, in my opinion, by 5.000 to 10.000 majority." A few weeks later, after a . "poll," he raised his estimate to "from 10,000 to 20,000." The State, of course, went Democratic by 7,000.

Henry C. Payne has been one of the Wisconsin leaders who have most convincingly assured the President that there is no cause for apprehension over the Wisconsin situation. We find him saving this same thing in September. 1892. Mr. Burrows, now a Senator from Michigan, after a tour of eleven States with the best of opportunities for "sizing up" the situation, set 25,000 as a reasonable figure for Harrison's plurality in Wisconsin. The State, in fact, gave Cleveland 7,000. Mr. Burrows likewise gave Illinois to Harrison by 20,000. The voters gave it to Cleveland by 27,000. John Kean, jr., who now represents New Jersey in the Senate, was then a candidate for Governor, and was one of the most modest of prognosticators, estimating his plurality at a paltry 5,000, which turned out to be just 20,000 too great.

How, after all, does any one pretend to know beforehand the result of an election? Our Senator goes West on a speaking tour, and, coming back for a call at national headquarters, remarks that Indiana is safe by 15,000. He has talked with the local managers of his own party. They base their information on reports from lieutenants. Some of these have attempted systematic polls of their territory, some have not, but all are eager to make the best possible showing for themselves. Even a poll conscientiously taken records but few of the independents whose shift from one side to the other is one of the chief forces in determining elections. Taking the most mercenary view, there is always the other fellow's money to be considered, and the difficulty of making men "stay bought."

That is the professional politician's situation. The layman is really much worse off. He is strangely fond of having an opinion beforehand on the result in an election. How does he get it? If he is a man of exceptionally wide acquaintance, he may have chatted on the issues, before the ballots are cast, with something like one two-thousandth of the voting population of this State. He knows three life-long Republicans who are indignant over the pension order. and two others who fear Imperialism so much that they will desert their old party allegiance. On the other hand, he has found four Democrats who wish to hold the Philippines, two who are enthusiastic over the clever handling of the Panama complication, and one who has put his money in a knife factory and fears tariff reduction. Seven is greater than five. Therefore, the Republicans will sweep the State.

The Spectator, in the article alluded to, describes "the respectable form of prophecy which consists in deductions from data which are too obscure and subtle to be obvious to a man's contemporaries." Such the glowing utterances of soothsayers at headquarters pretend to be, yet the Spectator recalls unfulfilled prophecies. "To the same class belong, too," it remarks, "prophecies which have failed, as when Adams on the eve of the French Revolution saw a long period of peace and prosperity in store for France, but immediate anarchy for England, or when De Tocqueville declared that America must remain an agricultural country with no large fortunes among her citizens. Both Adams and De Tocqueville thought they argued from good data, but they read their data wrong."

THE GOSPEL OF WORK FOR THE INDIANS.

The report made to the American Bar Association at St. Louis recently by its Committee on Indian Legislation contains the only gospel which can save what is still savable in the American Indian. It declares that what the nation must do for its ward is to compel him not only to work, but to work to an economic end. It is too much to expect, as the committee realize, that every Indian will at once become self-supporting, but he can be put upon the road to self-support and required to stay there. The compulsion will come, they believe, when the red man finds himself on the ground, with the alternative of digging a living out of it or starving to death.

Two distinct merits appear in this proposition. First, it does not blink disagreeable facts, perceiving that some Indians will be crushed under the wheel of civilization through their own unwillingness to adapt themselves to the universal order of mankind. Second, it frankly recognizes the wisdom of doing at once a duty which must be done some day, and which will only be made the harder by prolonged postponement. The trouble with nearly every white philanthropist who addresses his attention to the Indian problem is that he lets sentiment dominate judgment.

His pity for the individual quite overwhelms his sense of justice for the race. Because, in a group of one thousand Indians, five hundred would take their chances of going hungry if reduced to eating only what they earn, he is willing to sacrifice the welfare of the remaining five hundred who could and would do something for themselves if it were required of them. This is an error not only of logic, but of plain humanity. The history of mankind is full of illustrations showing that human progress has a cruel as well as a noble side. To abandon lawmaking because there are some members of every community too weak or too wrongheaded to conform their conduct to the laws when made, would be a monstrous wrong. Nobody except an anarchist would entertain such an idea, if stated abstractly; and yet there are thousands of good citizens who balk at the thought of bringing the Indian under the law of labor to which all the rest of mankind are subject

But the committee err in assuming that their proposed new order of things is not already in operation. The Government-lamely, it is true, and in the lumbering way in which it does most things-has been enforcing a compulsory labor law on Indian reservations for some years past. The practice has attracted less attention than it deserved, because it has been established by executive order and not by statute. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in pursuance of the general discretion reposed in him by law, has instructed agents everywhere to strike from the free-ration rolls all able-bodied Indians and provide them with work. Naturally, this rule has caused much dissatisfaction, especially in those tribes which had treaties with the Government guaranteeing to them certain food supplies in perpetuity; but the Commissioner has held fast to his purpose, on the theory that a sound interpretation of both the treaties and the general statutes justifled him in attaching terms to his distribution of good things.

The committee's demand that the severalty act be put into operation whereever practicable, might be met by the statement that this change, or something corresponding to it, is also in progress at so rapid a rate that probably before another ten years have passed there will not be a closed reservation in the United States. The general severalty law, which gave a wholesome impetus to the movement for individual land-ownership, has of late been superseded to a considerable extent by special legislation adapted to the varying conditions of different tribes. The general law, for example, provides for the allotment of eighty acres to each member of a tribe where the land is recognized as agricultural, but 160 acres a large part of the frontier West it has proved difficult to classify the land satisfactorily. There are districts in Oklahoma where an active controversy still rages over the question whether they are best adapted for raising wheat or grazing cattle. In places where wheat seems to have gained the day, it is still regarded as dubious whether, in view of exposeure to floods or droughts five years out of ten, the intent of the law would not be nullified unless a double crop could be raised in the fruitful years to make up for the failures in the barren years. In the colder parts of Montana a doubt whether, even with irrigation, anything except hav can be grown, raises the further question whether a hav country is not, after all, only a stock-raising country, and therefore, in fairness, to be governed by the same allotment rule as grazing land.

These few examples will suffice to show the intricacies besetting a subject which seems simple enough on its face. and will explain why the Executive has in so many cases deferred to Congress in the application of the severalty system. Another reason may be found in the fact that the opening of the unallotted Indian lands to white settlement is not an executive but a legislative function, and the only part the Executive takes in the matter is the protection of the Indians by insisting that Congress shall put a fair price upon the opened lands. One of the hardest of recent struggles between these two branches of the Government occurred over the opening of the Rosebud Reservation in South Dakota, made memorable by the riots at Bonesteel last July. When this subject was before Congress, most of the South Dakota delegation stood out for a low price per acre, to be offered as an inducement to the immigration of white settlers; and the President would have been defeated in his fight for fair treatment of the Indians if he had not made it plain that he would veto the whole bill unless this item were satisfactorily adjusted.

Public utterances like those of the Bar Association's committee are an encouraging sign that the intelligence of the American people is coming to the aid of their interest, and their generally right purpose, with regard to the Indians. While it is true that after a long period of sluggishness the Government is waking up to its duty, no harm can come from an active application of the moral prod by just such hands as are now wielding it.

IRISH AFFAIRS.

DUBLIN, September, 1904.

the allotment of eighty acres to each member of a tribe where the land is recognized as agricultural, but 160 acres where it is fit only for grazing; but in Wyndham's bill was considerably modified in passing through Parliament, but only in details. The act provides that a landlord selling his entire estate shall be paid the price agreed on between him and his tenants in cash, instead of as heretofore in 2% per cent. stock. In addition to the price, the seller is to get a bonus of 12 per cent. on the price, to be relieved of legal fees and stamp duties, and enabled to borrow at the rate of 2% per cent. on the security of his residence and demesne. New machinery was created for the more rapid distribution of the purchase money among sellers and their mortgagees, and three "estates commissioners" were specially appointed to carry out the sale provisions of the act, under which the Chief Secretary anticipated that almost the whole of the tenanted land in Ireland might be transferred to the occupiers within fifteen or twenty years.

Tenant purchasers are to repay the prices agreed by an annuity for sixty-nine years at the rate of 314 per cent., interest being at 2% per cent., and the sinking fund at 1/2 per cent. Hitherto, repayment has been made by a 4 per cent. annuity for forty-two years, interest being at 2% and the sinking fund at 11/4 per cent. From an arithmetical standpoint an annuity of 4 per cent, for forty-two years is of the same capital value as 34 per cent, for sixty-nine years, interest in both cases being at 2% per cent. While the annual payment is at a lower rate, the risk of non-payment is spread over a longer term, and the effect of the longer term is to increase largely the amount of interest paid. Thus, a borrower of £100 will in sixty-nine years have to pay £189 as interest, and £35 as sinking fund, while at the same rate of interest in forty-two years he would have paid as interest £116, and as sinking fund £52.

The money for this transaction is raised by the issue of stock in England bearing 2% per cent, interest, and repayable at par in thirty years. The loss to the Imperial Exchequer, the bonus to sellers, and any loss from default in repayment are to be debited to and charged against Irish funds; that is to say, the expenditure hitherto claimed to be necessary for police is to be diminished. The grants for local purposes-education, poor relief, and the like, equivalent to those made in the rest of the United Kingdom-are to be pledged for and indented on to cover any loss in this transaction, which it is estimated will cost in the whole about 120 millions sterling. Losses include that arising from the issue of the stock, which at present is at a discount of 10 per cent.

Under former acts it was the special duty of the lending authority to refuse loans unless the security for each advance was deemed adequate, but under the present act the estates commissioners must, for most classes of farms and within certain limits of price, lend without any inquiry into the sufficiency of the security. Thus there is no check on improvident buyers, or on those whom impending eviction for arrears of rent has placed at the mercy of the selling landlord. In such cases default in payment is likely to occur, and as the whole local taxation is liable to make good any losses from non-payment, or delay in repayment, the bargains made between landlords and tenants are a matter of vital concern to the whole body of ratepayers. The local councils, however, who are the guarantors in the last resort for repayment to the Treasury, are not allowed any voice in the matter. As long as loss from default fell directly on the British Treasury, it was considered of the first importance that the security for every loan should be strictly scrutinized; but when Irish local rates were fully hypothecated, all precautions were withdrawn.

The act is working well from the sellers point of view. Under former acts sales were made at the rate of less than two million pounds' worth in each year, at prices averaging less than eighteen years' purchase of the rents. But during the last nine months the estates commissioners have received agreements to the amount of ten million pounds, at prices averaging twentytwo years' purchase of the rent. In addition to this price, selling landlords get the bonus and exemption from stamp duties and other legal expenses, so that it appears that landlords can now sell at prices equivalent to 40 per cent. more than former current rates, and, under this inducement, are selling about six times as fast as they did before 1903. Tenant purchasers appear willing, in order to secure an immediate reduction in their annual payments, to agree to prices 22 per cent, higher than before without any reference to the additional burden that will fall on them as ratepayers to provide the bonus and make up the losses arising from the issue of stock at a discount, and possible default in repayment by some of the tenant purchasers. It was supposed that, in consideration of the bonus and other advantages, landlords who had been anxious to sell at current rates would abate the prices they were asking, and that tenants would rush in and buy. What has happened is, that landlords have claimed that, as the repayment instalments are now at a lower rate, though for a longer term, the tenants can afford to pay a larger price, and so far they have induced the tenants to do so.

A good illustration of what is going on all over the country came under my notice last week. A large estate in Kerry was sold three years ago for eighteen years' purchase of the rents. The landlord was paid in stock worth 90, so that he got a little more than sixteen years' purchase in cash. I noticed on this estate new buildings and reclamation of waste land, which the owners said they could now make with safety. Adjoining this estate, another extensive tract of poor land, said to be held at higher rents, was sold within the last month to the tenants, who agreed to give twenty-three years' purchase of their rents, the landlord getting, in addition, the bonus and the other incidental advantages which I have mentioned. Thus, on adjoining estates of similar quality, the first landlord got for a £10 rent £165; the second landlord got £260.

On the whole, the Land Act of 1903 is resulting in a very large number of estates being sold, but at prices so high, at rates so far in excess of those which have hitherto prevailed, that repayment of their loans by the tenant purchasers may be doubtful. The restriction of expenditure on education, poor relief, and development of the local resources of the country, is a serious burden on ratepayers, and, as landlords are practically exempted from all local rates on their tenanted estates, and with few exceptions take no part in the management of the educational system, or in the ordinary local business dealing with roads, bridges, and local improvements, they pay no attention to the burden on the rates which has been imposed in their interest. Eight years ago a royal commission reported that Ireland was overtaxed in proportion to Great Britain to the amount of nearly three millions sterling a year. Since then as much more has been added to the burden of taxation on the continually diminishing population of Ireland, and this falls mainly on the poorest classes. The additional duty placed on tea this year means not less than £400,000, to be paid mainly by the poorest classes.

The Government of Ireland is still as wasteful, extravagant, and inefficient as ever. Ireland lags behind the rest of the world in education and the development of its internal resources. For forty years successive governments have promised to establish a system of university education which would suit the needs of the country and be acceptable to the people. To obtain votes, to conciliate the Catholic hierarchy. they have held out hopes and given promises without stint, but nothing has been done. The system of primary education is administered by an unrepresentative, irresponsible board of seventeen members, appointed for political reasons, but never on the grounds of any special knowledge of their duties. They hold secret meetings. give no information as to their proceed ings, and are unaccountable to Parliament or to the public. The history, poetry, and language of Ireland have been practically excluded from their programme. Owing to the growing influence of the Gaelic League, the Irish language is now unwillingly permitted to be taught. Drawing has been introduced only within the last three years. The "national" system of education has been one of the most potent instruments of the Anglicization of Ireland. "You speak Irish; how is it your children can't speak it?" I said to a woman lately. "They wouldn't be allowed to use it in school, so we checked them using it at home," was her reply. When the home language is not the vehicle of education, what an obstacle exists in the way of imparting knowledge!

The defects, extravagance, and inefficiency of the present system of education are fully admitted, but as every change requires legislation at Westminster, nothing is or is likely to be done. A movement attracting more attention in England than in Ireland is that of the Irish Reform Association, a self-constituted committee of landlords under the presidency of Lord Dunraven. This body has put forward a programme held by some to be a manifesto in the direction of Home Rule, by others intended to anticipate and minimize legislation in that direction which the balance of parties after a general election may make inevitable. This committee advocates a devolution to Ireland of a larger measure of local government; it considers the present system of financial administration waster ful and inappreciative of the needs of the country-that a system of Irish finance could be devised whereby the expenditure could be conducted in a more efficient and economic manner; that "private"-bill legislation should be conducted in Ireland; that the whole system of education requires remodelling and coordination; that the settlement of the question of higher education is urgently needed; that the better housing of the laboring classes is of the utmost importance. And they announce that they will coöperate in any practicable proposals having the betterment of this class in view.

These are brave words. The English Conservative press denounces the Committee as traitors to the Unionist cause, tampering with the accursed thing, Home Rule; while the Liberal press commend the manifesto as a sign of reasonableness at last among Irish landlords. In Ireland the manifesto is looked upon as an astute move made for the purpose of detaching weak Nationalists from the Home Rule party, attracting those Unionists who see that their party can no longer maintain its irreconcilable position, and attempting to regain some of the political power which the landlords are losing by capturing the laborers' vote. I am inclined to think that this committee is, in a sense, in earnest. They and many others of their class would be in favor of Home Rule if they could be certain that they would be the Home Rulers. Having, during the rule of the Unionists, obtained enormous plunder out of the public purse, by exemption from their share of local taxation, by the reduction of their liabilities to the Exchequer in tithes and quitrents, and, finally, under the last Land Act, having secured, actually or potentially, prices for their estates, at the cost of the public which exceeded their wildest hopes as much as they exceeded the price of a falling and discredited security, the landlords may be satisfied that there is no more to be got out of the public purse. That they are in favor of popular government, or of the Irish people as a whole (through their representatives) being responsible for their own expenditure and the taxation which that expenditure requires, I do not think.

Their professions of regard for the better housing of the laboring classes may be judged by their performances. The Irish small farmers and laborers were the worst-housed peasantry in Europe, and their houses belonged in law to the landlords. Several Laborers Acts have been passed during the last fifteen years to enable local governing bodies to build suitable cottages with small plots of land attached, to do what in England is considered the duty of the landowner. As a rule, the landlord party have opposed all legislation which involved the compulsory acquisition of sites. By continual appeals against the action of the district councils they have added largely to the expense, which fell almost entirely on the tenant ratepayers. As an example of this: In a southern town, lately visited, which with the whole surrounding district belongs to a wealthy owner who, within the last thirty years, built a new residence for himself at a cost of £100,000, the Council sought to acquire two acres for artisans' dwellings. The landlord opposed them, with the result that the legal and parliamentary costs of acquiring the two acres for which the landlord asked £900 amounted to £300. The price then remained to be fixed by a Government arbitrator.

As to the financial relations of Ireland and England, the party represented by Lord Dunraven's Committee taught the country a lesson eight years ago. They formed a Committee, invited and got the cooperation of the Nationalists, and made flery speeches in Ireland; Lord Castletown holding up the example of the Boston citizens in relation to the tea duty as a pattern for Irishmen. But, invited to repeat what he had said in the House of Lords, he toned down and explained away his speech, wrote apologetic letters to the Times; and as soon as Parliament had exempted the landlords from their share of local taxation, the Committee melted away and has never been heard of since. It remains to be seen whether the Nationalists who were then made a cat's-paw of, will associate themselves with Lord Dunraven's new Committee. Their best course would be to commend the new departure of the landlords, but to let them work out their programme alone, giving Parliamentary support when the occasion arises.

AN IRISHMAN.

MORE ABOUT FOUCHÉ.

PARIS, September 25, 1904.

I mentioned, not long ago, and analyzed the work published by M. Louis Madelin on the famous Fouché. Duke of Otranto. seemed as if the matter were exhausted by this author's compendious and conscientious volumes. M. G. Lenotre, whose studies on the Revolutionary period are so remarkable, has, however, added a cur ous chapter to M. Madelin's history-a chapter especially devoted to Fouché's married life and to Madame Fouché. This reads at times like a novel and at times like a drama. M. Lenotre is a psychologist as well as a historian; he gives intense life to the subjects which he treats. We would not, however, encourage him to bring his favorite subjects on the stage, as he has recently done; the stage requires arrangement, artificiality, and often inexactitude, and M. Lenotre's chief merit as an historian is absolute fidelity to the truth.

At the time of the diligences, long before the time of railways, the provincial traveller arrived in the Court of the Messageries, Rue Notre-Dame des Victoires. There he found porters who took possession of his luggage and carried it, often on their backs, to the place which the traveller had assigned to him. It was in this modest way that, in the last days of September, 1792, Joseph Fouché, chosen Deputy by the electors of the Loire-Inférieure, arrived in Paris. He brought with him his wife. Bonne Jeanne, whom he had married only ten days before. She was twenty-eight years old; she was plain, red-haired-what the French call a decided laideron. His father was president of the administration of the district of Nantes. It has been said, wrongly, that Jeanne had belonged to a religious order; nothing is known of her infancy or her education. She lived in the shade even after her husband had risen to eminence. Husband and wife took an apartment in the third story of those narrow houses in the Rue Saint-Honoré, near the church of Saint-Roch, many of which still exist. Fouché knew the quarter well, as he had often passed through Paris at the time when he was an Oratorian. The house had the advantage of not being far from the Assembly, which sat at the Manège, near the Tuileries.

Fouché went regularly to the Chamber, but spent all the rest of his time at home with his wife, who was in the family way. Nothing interested her but her household and her husband, judging everything he said or did excellent, sharing all his successive opinions, not from indolence of mind, but from love of him. This piously educated Bretonne is not astonished when, feeling the wind, Fouché writes in his 'Reflections on Public Education," "All religion belittles and degrades man." She is no more moved when, after the sitting, he comes to announce to her that he has voted for the King's death, and that the King will be condemned. He is sent on a mission, and she joins him, though on the eve of her confinement. They go to Champagne, to Burgundy, to Nevers. On the 10th of August, at Nevers, on the anniversary of the abolition of royalty, she gives birth to a child, and the city celebrates the event. "The National Guard is under arms. the child is shown to the people; a procession is formed in the Place de la Fédération, where the guillotine is erected." At the altar of the Fatherland, a citoyen and a citoyenne preside over the civic baptism; the child receives the name of Nièvre. the Proconsul associated his wife with his glory. He loved her tenderly, consulted her often, gave her an intimate place in his life." "She is a model of her sex," wrote he. Of a very pure life, he remained the faithful husband, the constant and devoted friend, in the first years of the marriage. Notwithstanding the horrible ugliness of Bonne Jeanne, he is in love like a shepherd of Florian, and wants people to know it. M. Lenotre gives curious descriptions of feasts which the Proconsul gave as Brutus, in which the execution of criminals alternates with mythological scenes, and in which he is himself dressed as a "priest of nature," with a crown of fruits.

Fouché finds himself so happy in his married life that he abolishes, with a stroke of his pen, ecclesiastical celibacy, and forces every priest "to get married in the course of a month or to adopt a child." He has many occupations; he drains the country of all ecclesiastical ornaments and sends them to Paris. He goes to Lyons on the 10th of November, with his wife and the little Nièvre: he finds there Collot, and proceeds at once with him to the pillage of the churches. "On the 4th of December sixty-four young men are, in his presence, killed with cannon-shot; on the 15th, two hundred and nine fall victims of the mitraille on the Place des Brotteaux; and in the evening Fouché returns serenely home, embraces his wife, inquires for his little child, a sickly infant, whose health constantly made its parents uneasy. He wrote in his fine, nervous, and rapid hand to his colleagues in the Convention those famous letters which are monuments of ferocity and sanguinary delirium: "Tears of joy fill my eyes, they fill my soul. . . . We sent to-night two hundred and thirteen rebels under fire." Bonne Jeanne, the only person whom he consulted, probably read these reports, but she approved everything he did. He quitted her very little. They would walk arm in arm through the city paralyzed with horror, and sometimes went as far as the Place des Brotteaux.

An Oratorian, a friend at the Seminary of Nantes, Father Mollet, one day asked Fouché to help him escape, as his life was threatened. As it was the hour of their promenade, Fouché took him with him and his wife. At the Brotteaux, before the trees which had been splintered by the mitraille, Mollet nearly fainted. Bonne Jeanne, who walked "with as much impassibility as if she had been in a garden full of roses, was amazed at the emotion of their companion. Fouché shrugged his shoulders. 'Let him make his grimaces and don't talk to him,' said he to his wife." We must add that he gave a passport to Mollet, and thus saved his life. The complete Fouché is in this anecdote.

Barras tells us in his Memoirs that Madame Fouché left Lyons a few days before her husband, in a coach which broke down in the suburb of Vaise, and that this accident revealed a large quantity of packages, her plunder of Lyons. There was, however, no change on their return, in 1794, to the Rue Saint-Honoré. The Fouchés had even debts: the child was ill. Robespierre. who had become a sort of demigod was so hostile to Fouché that he had to hide from place to place. For ten days he felt, as M. Lenotre says, under the knife of the guillotine. Curiously enough, during these very days he used to meet, under the trees in the Champs-Élysées, Robespierre's sister. What could there be between them? Did she not know that he was married? Did she hope to marry him? We have here, says M. Lenotre, one of those mysterious comedies which abound in the history of the Revolution. What is certain is, that long afterwards Fouché, as Duke of Otranto, gave a small pension to Robespierre's sister.

Fouché succeeded in not becoming a victim of Robespierre, but he was hated by thosa who triumphed in Thermidor; he was looked upon as one of the most sanguinary tyrants of the Terror, with Carrier and Lebon. His child died at that time, and his wife could not be consoled. He soon had another child, as sickly as the first. After the dissolution of the Convention, he entered into partnership with another member of that body, and undertook to feed and sell pigs. The speculation was not fortunate; he found himself ruined, and on the 31st of December he exiled himself to Saint-Leu, in the valley of Montmorency, where he had a third child, but the children died one after the other.

In 1797 a change of fortune took place; Fouché became an army contractor, and soon afterwards was named Legate of the Directory at Milan. He made the journey to Italy with his wife, who had there a fourth child. From Milan, he was sent to The Hague, as Ambassador. Madame Fouché was not intoxicated by her new grandeur, and remained quite effaced. "One would believe," says M. Lenotre, "that Madame Fouché was unintelligent or apathetic, if one did not know that she was half in all the works of her husband, that she shared all his secrets, that she advised him, that she had constant influence over him." They both had but one desire-to found a family and to enrich it. Everything was subordinated to that sentiment; even ambition seemed only a means to satisfy it. They devoted themselves to their object with a haste which looks like eagerness, as on the day when, leaving the Legation of Milan, they took away, as a memorial of their ephemeral piece of luck, the carriage, the horses, the linen, and a number of things belonging to the Embassy.

We find Fouché always the same in his conjugal relations; he does not care, when he becomes omnipotent, if Paris laughs at his affection for his "laideron." In 1803 he has four children, all in good health; he lives with Madame Fouché in the Hôtel de Juigné, on the Quai Malaquais, which has become the Hôtel of the General Police, the formidable centre of a police which covers the whole of France and the whole of Europe. There Fouché receives every day the reports of his agents, spies, former Terrorists, Chouans, ladies of the world, prostitutes, etc. Fouché organizes this terrible machine; he is all-powerful. He is very rich, and has great domains in France and in Italy. But his domestic life is still modest; when he does not wear his rich uniform, he is dressed like the meanest of the clerks of his ministers. He spends all his evenings with his family when he is not obliged to

"The Duchess," says M. Lenotre, "does not consent to leave her children. An old relation, the governess of her daughter, a person of wit and of good manners, some old Oratorians, Fouché's secretary, the preceptor of his sons, are the only guests. They find amusement in a game of cards. Joseph, Armand, Athanase and Josephine run about the room. This man of lee, whom the portraits show us with a terrific pallor, with white lips, colorless hair and eyebrows, and the impassibility of a ghost—this man is gay at home, full of fun, an incessant talker. He goes to bed at ten, like his wife and children; all five sleep in the same room. Bonne Jeanne instituted this régime; she is as jealous of her husband as if he were twenty years old."

He is himself perfectly satisfied; he does not conceal the fact that he loves his wife, and praises to everybody "her enlightened mind and her rare virtues." Bonne Jeanne has become very plous; she receives the Cardinal de Belloy, the Archbishop of Paris. Fouché proclaims that he owes everything to his remembrance of the morals of the Gospel." At Ferrières, where Fouché retired during the disgrace which followed the Russian campaign, Madame Fouché fell ill; she died there on the 9th of October, 1813, at the age of forty-eight years. "I am much to be pitied," wrote Fouché, "since I have had the misfortune to lose the companion of my life; my work, my books, my walks, my sleep-everything was in common with her." It did not prevent him from getting married, three years afterwards, to Gabrielle de Castellane, and Louis XVIII., forgetful of Louis XVI., signed the marriage contract.

Correspondence.

NON TALI AUXILIO.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NATION:

SIR: Is not this sermon rather severe on our President?—Yours truly,

EDWIN BRAINARD.

CHICAGO, September 27, 1904.

REV. F. E. HOPKINS.

[Pilgrim Congregational Church.]

In our city we have had nearly a hundred insurrections in the past eight months, called strikes. And employer and employee still regard each other in a way that invites more of the same sort. We know there are at least ten thousand hungry persons in this town as a result of eight weeks' war at the stockyards. We know that in our hearts we are glad we humbled Spain, gobbled up Porto Rico, hold the whiplash over Cuba, mean to "develop" the Philippines, and that millions of men hope to elect as our next President a man who climbed to his present eminence on what somebody has called a "ladder of swords." For all these reasons we discreetly held our tongues when the peace advocates were in Chicago. We permitted the international delegates to find their own enjoyment; and, whether we were polite of not, we were something a great deal more important—we were not hypocrites. It was a great thing for a big city, even unintentionally, to say, We have no sympathy with vague ideas and false definitions of peace.

TOTAL ABSTINENCE IN GERMANY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NATION:

SIR: Only a few years ago, who would have believed that in Germany a total-abstinence movement would gain ground so as to attract general attention; that it would make headway against universal and inveterate habit, against ignorance, prejudice, and the love of beer? And yet all this has taken place, and is in progress.

The present agitation against the use of intoxicating drinks has some remarkable features of its own, differing, as it does, very much from the temperance movement here some sixty years ago, and also from the more recent temperance agitation in England and America. In the latter instances it was chiefly the religious, moral, and economic aspects of the drink question which furnished the weapons to combat it, whereas at present in Germany the chief reliance is placed upon the results of scientific investigation concerning the effects of the alcoholic beverages. It may interest the American reader to learn how a beerdrinking nation takes to total abstinence, and what prospects there may be for the cause of temperance in a country where the drink habit permeates all classes of society, and where all social intercourse is associated with the use of wine or beer.

The present movement against the use of alcoholic beverages is of recent date, as appears from what Professor Bunge of Basel says, namely, that as late as 1888 he was the only man within the wide range of the German language who publicly came forward for total abstinence. And Professor Forel, another one of the great leaders of the cause, says that when, in 1887, he urged that, in accordance with English practice, alcoholism should be treated by total abstinence, he was laughed at and railed at, for in Germany and Switzerland alcoholism was treated by alcohol! The force of social usages when in conflict with the unwelcome truth of the harmfulness of alcoholic beverages is strikingly shown by the experience of Prof. A. Fick of Würzburg, as told by his son, Prof. Rudolph Fick of Leipzig, saying that his father, who died in 1891, and who was opposed to the use of alcoholics, did not during his lifetime see any progress of the cause of abstinence worth mentioning, but that he was made to suffer almost daily for his opinion and his practice of abstinence w ridicule and other tribulations.

When, through the efforts of Professors Bunge and Forel, and a few others, the cause of abstinence at last attracted some attention, Professor Kraepelin of Heidelberg in 1892 undertook a series of experiments for the purpose of ascertaining the effect of alcohol upon the simpler operations of the mind, in the hope, as he confesses, of saving something of the reputation of wine and beer. These experiments, which were afterwards extended by some younger men under the direction of Professor Kraepelin, have attracted a good deal of attention, and their results are a storehouse of material for combating the defenders of the moderate glass. They show, of course (what seemed at the time surprising), that the sensation of increased vigor and alertness after drinking a moderate quantity of wine or beer is altogether a delusion; that, on the contrary, the powers of body and mind are diminished by these beverages. More astonishing still, the enfeebling effect persists much longer than was suspected. Thus, Aschaffenburg, experimenting with typesetters, ascertained that when these men had drunk half a bottle of wine each, they were under the delusion of increased vigor and capacity for work, while they actually did inferior work. This disturbing influence was still quite distinct on the following day, so that a second day of abstinence was necessary to bring the men up again to their own standard of efficiency.

A flood of other material was supplied: the greater mortality of the moderate drinker as compared with the abstainer, his greater tendency to mental disorder and to crime. But, alas! how great is the power of habit, how deaf are those who will not hear! Though proof abundant is now at hand that alcoholic beverages injure the health, blunt the understanding, poison the soul, yet those who should before all others take heed-the students at the universities and those who once were students-refuse (with rare exceptions) to be warned. The churches are indifferent or unfriendly to the cause of abstinence; physicians stand aloof, nay, continue to prescribe wine as an invigorating drink to convalescents.

There is, however, a more hopeful side to this matter. The cause of abstinence is making vigorous progress among the laboring classes, who in increasing numbers are joining the order of Good Templars which came to us from England. We have among the laborers and artisans many men enthusiastic for the cause of abstinence. They are rapidly gaining new members from among their numbers. In method of work the German Good Templars differ widely from their English brethren, for whereas in England the churches are active promoters of the cause of abstinence, and the whole mode of agitation has a clerical aspect, and much is made of the Bible as an aid, nothing of the kind takes place in Germany. The pamphlets here used for agitation are short treatises on the effects of alcohol written by such men as Bunge. Forel, and Kraepelin, besides many other writers, all of whom adopt the scientific or physiological aspect. These little tracts, while showing the deleterious effect of drink upon the drinker and his family, do not omit to call attention to the baneful effects of inheritance. Kraepelin and Bunge insist that he who thus poisons the germs of the coming generation commits a criminal act.

The Good Templars have by this time gained a firm hold in the province of Schleswig-Holstein, and in the cities of Hamburg and Bremen. Gradually they are making their way into other portions of the Empire. Thus we have the singular spectacle of an effort among the humbler classes for deliverance from a social vice which afflicts the whole nation, while Church and school stand by indifferent; an effort among the lowly to regain health and vigor, while physicians look on inactive; a struggle to purify family life, to regenerate the nation, in which Church and State take no part.

Respectfully, WERNER A. STILLE.

CHANCELLOR NESSELRODE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NATION:

SIR: Allow me to correct a statement in your issue of September 8, 1904, page 195, in the Paris letter on "The Nesselrode Papers." Instead of: "He [Chancellor Nesselrode] lived ninety years, and died as recently as 1850," must be read: "He lived eighty-two years, and died as recently as 1862."

C. B. OSTEN SACKEN.

Late Consul-General of Russia in New York

HEIDELBERO, GERMANY, September 20, 1904.

AN INQUIRY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NATION:

SIR: To the second edition of his Ecclesiastical Sonnets Wordsworth prefixed the following lines:

"A verse may catch a wandering soul that flies Profounder Tracts, and by a blest surprise Convert delight into a sacrifice."

From what source did Wordsworth derive these lines? Professor Dowden says from George Herbert; Professor Knight, more cautious, bids us compare them with Herbert. The fifth and sixth lines of Herbert's "Church Porch" read thus:

"A verse may find him who a sermon files, And turn delight into a sacrifice."

It was common enough for the poets of the seventeenth century to seize a good bit of verse wherever they found it and to rewrite it for their own purpose. In several instances Herbert so rewrote Donne; and Herbert was himself constantly rewritten by Harvey and Vaughan, and to a less extent by Crashaw and Speed. But who carried him up to these "Profounder Tracts" which pleased Wordsworth? I am unable to discover. Can any of your readers inform me?—Very truly yours,

G. H. PALMER.

HARVARD UNIVERSITY, October 3, 1904.

Notes.

The Clarendon Press are to publish for the executors of the late Prof. Frederick York Powell a selection of his shorter and dispersed writings, with a prefatory memoir. The loan of letters and papers contributory to this end is solicited by Prof. J. A. Stewart, Christ Church, Oxford.

For the preparation of a second edition of his official catalogue of Whistler's Lithographs, Mr. T. R. Way will be glad to communicate with owners of lithographs undescribed in the first, through his publishers, Messrs. George Bell & Sons, Portugal Street, London, W. C.

While Mr. James Bryce is visiting this country, Macmillan Company are putting to press a rewritten and enlarged edition of his 'Holy Roman Empire.'

Henry Frowde announces an exact facsimile of the original English edition of Grimm's Tales, with Cruikshank's illustrations to the 1823 and 1826 editions, printed from the original plates. Only 240 copies will be for sale.

Harper & Brothers have nearly ready 'Theophano: The Crusade of the Tenth Century,' by Frederick Harrison; 'A Journey in Search of Christmas,' by Owen Wister. The Luxuries,' by Edward S. Martin; and 'True Bills,' by George Ade.

Baker & Taylor's fall list includes The Art of Carlcature, a manual, by Grant Wright; The Appreciation of Sculpture, by Russell Sturgis; and 'The Episcopalians,' by Daniel D. Addison, D.D. (in "The Story of the Churches").

A. S. Barnes & Co. are to undertake a new literary series "In the Days of ——" (Chaucer, and Shakspere, by Tudor Jenks; with more undesignated). Mr. Mabie will furnish introductions.

Brentano's will shortly bring out 'Visits to the Louvre,' by Dr. Arthur Mahler, in collaboration with Carlos Blacker and W. A. Slater, sumptuously illustrated.

'Three Weeks in Europe, or the Vacation of a Busy Man,' by John U. Higinbotham, in announced by Herbert S. Stone & Co., Chicago.

The American Unitarian Association, Boston, will republish the Works of Channing in six volumes, with an introduction by the Rev. John W. Chadwick; and 'Tides of the Spirit,' selections from the writings of James Martineau, edited by Albert Lazenby.

Little, Brown & Co. announce a new work on the Law of Evidence by Prof. John H. Wigmore of Northwestern University.

The old Roman border fort, the Saalburg, in the Taunus Mountains, is to be described in the light of excavations and restorations, by Jacobi, Woltze, and Schulze, with abundant illustrations, some in color. The publisher is F. A. Perthes in Gotha (New York; Lemcke & Buechner).

An English book of 'Selected Cases on the Law of Torts' is published at the Clarendon Press, Oxford (New York: Henry Frowde). The authors are Francis R. Y. Radcliffe and J. C. Miles, and they have rewritten the headnotes of all the cases 'so as to state the principle established" rather than "the application of that principle to a particular set of facts." other notes are mainly "explanatory or supplemental": in two or three instances they present a statement of the existing law. The cases themselves are abridgments from the original reports. Some authorities lend themselves to this sort of treatment better than others. It should be said that the book is designed chiefly for teachers of law in England.

The third volume of the Hon. John Boyd Thacher's 'Christopher Columbus' (G. P Putnam's Sons) contains six chapters, with forty-one reproductions of alleged portraits, on the personal appearance of Columbus: two chapters on his handwriting; twenty on the history of his remains since their first burial; and seven on the various families claiming legitimate descent from the discoverer. As in the preceding volumes, the most valuable feature consists of facsimiles of Columbian material, including a series of copies of photographs of all the letters and other unquestioned autographs known to be extant, forty-two in number, with transcriptions and translations. Throughout, the author's contributions evidence the same critical and historical insight, the same literary and linguistic capacity which marked the previous volumes.

Some forty years ago the Rev. Oswald Cockayne issued, as part of the Master of the Rolls Series, three stout volumes entitled 'Leechdoms, Wortcunning and Stareraft of Early England,' containing a collection of Anglo-Saxon medical treatises. Dr. Joseph Frank Payne, in the Fitz-Patrick Lectures for 1903, made use of the material thus furnished and has issued the results under the title of 'English Medicine in the Anglo-Saxon Times' (Oxford: Clarendon Press; New York: H. Frowde), with some illustrations of medicinal plants drawn from an illuminated MS. of the 'Herbarium Apuleii Platonici,' an Anglo-Saxon version of which forms part of the Cockayne collection. Dr. Payne has endeavored, with more or less success, to trace the derivation of the curative lore of our ancestors to the sources, whether indigenous or derived from the works and traditions of the great Græco-Roman medical school, and he pays a tribute to Anglo-Saxon botanical zeal in the fact that the MSS, furnish about five hundred English plant-names of herbs used medicinally. The illustrations curiously manifest how crude were the ideas of the artists with regard to vegetable forms. The most interesting are a series representing the mandrake, and showing how the resemblance of the root to a human body developed into the conception of a complete man with a crown of leaves growing from the top of his head. All of them show a dog attached and tugging at it, this being the time-honored method of gathering it, on account of the superstition that whoever pulled up a mandrake root would shortly perish.

The seventh edition of a well-known handbook hardly needs a special review. Fifty years ago, the Rev. Dr. G. U. Pope, the present University Teacher of Tamil and Telugu at Oxford, aided by the superintendent of the American Mission Press. published the 'Tamil Handbook,' since prescribed for civilians appointed to Madras. Half a century of improvements, incorporating the result of twenty years' active teaching, has produced a "final edition" of 'The Handbook of the Ordinary Dialect of the Tamil Language' (Oxford: Clarendon Press; New York: H. Frowde). venerable author is spared to see his final edition become a penultimate edition, he may still perfect perfection by suppressing here and there what seems like a vain repetition, such as the paragraph on the aytham found on page 13 and almost duplicated on page 22. But it is sufficient to say that of the half-dozen Tamil handbooks in existence this is, as it has been, the best; the latest edition having utilized Bühler's 'Indische Palaeographie' for historical statements in regard to the history of the alphabet, while the practical need of the student is always before the author's eye. A good point is that all the examples are drawn from the actual literature, not made up to illustrate a rule.

Dr. Sven Hedin contributes to Petermann's Mitteilungen, No. 7, what will be substantially the preface to the forthcoming volumes containing the scientific facts of his last journey. As bringing out strongly the personality of the great traveller it has an unusual interest. The work will consist of eight volumes, to be published in 1906. The edition is limited to 250 copies, price £15. The first two subscribers were the Japanese Count Otani, and the Geographical Society in Tokyo. His own narrative will consist of four volumes of 2,000 pages instead of one as he at first planned. Taking the form of a diary, it will be practically notes explanatory of his 1,149 maps, or, in his own words, "a topographical, morphological, hydrographical, and orographical description of the land through which I travelled." The English translation is by J. T. Bealby, the translator of his previous books. Dr. Sven Hedin regrets the meagreness of his contributions to some important branches of science, from the lack of a scientific staff, and adds, "but I have the peculiarity of loving to be alone, and hence on my travels have always been alone." After a reference to Newton's (attributed by Hedin to Mommsen) comparison of himself to a boy playing on the seashore, he says: "How shall I call myself then?-a child who has never looked on the far horizon of this immeasurable ocean, and whose glance has never swept over its blue mirror, to say nothing of playing with pebbles on the strand. Yet the experiences and observations which I have made in the toilsome wanderings to that wondrous shore, I give to the students of geographical research, in the hope that my work has not been wholly in vain."

An interesting memorial of the days when the Jesuit missionaries formed an influential link between the learning of Western Europe and that of China is reproduced. in reduced facsimile, in the eighth volume of the 'Skrifter utgifna af Kongl. Humanistiska Vetenskaps-Samfundet i Uppsala' (Leipzig: Harrassowitz). It is a six-foot map of the world, in two hemispheres, drawn by P. Ferdinand Verbiest, a Jesuit father who, born in Flanders in 1623, went to China in 1659 and died there twentynine years later. In 1671 Verbiest is said to have been appointed royal astronomer to the Emperor Kang-Hsih. His map, evidently drawn some years after this appointment, shows that he must have obtained from Europe several of the best-known contemporary geographical publications. The representation of "The Middle Kingdom," which is given the position demanded by its name, is of course the most important portion of the map. The facsimile, although too small to show the details necessary for careful study, gives quite enough to prove the extent and the accuracy of the geographical information in the possession of the Chinese rulers regarding all their outlying dependencies.

The Northern Museum in Stockholm has just sent out its annual report (Meddelanden) for 1902(!). The most interesting acquisition of that year was Viktor Rydberg's library of about 3,000 volumes, and the furniture from his study, presented by his widow. By bequest of the painter, Prof. J. A. Malmström, the Museum received 650 sheets and 26 sketchbooks of original drawings, aquarelles, and oil paintings of buildings, costumes, and race types from Sweden, Norway, and Finland. Numerous pieces of household goods, peasant costumes, and furniture from all parts of Sweden have been added to the collections, as well as some fine specimens of artistic furniture from the end of the eighteenth and beginning of the nineteenth centuries, and some old musical instruments, among them a clavichord made by Peter Kraft in 1801. Three new buildings have been put up at the outdoor museum "Skansen," certainly the most unique part of the whole establishment. Two of them are of particular interest, as illustrating the life of the Finnish population in northern and middle Sweden; one is a dwelling, the other a combined dwelling, steam bathhouse, and grain kiln. A descriptive catalogue of the historico-ethnographical collections at 'Skansen' was begun during the year; when completed, it ought to be an important contribution to ethnographical literature. The Museum took part in the International Exposition of Military and Modern Costumes held in St. Petersburg; this necessitated the purchase of a large number of articles of costume, which was made possible through the munificence of Mr. Emanuel Nobel in St. Petersburg, a nephew of Alfred Nobel. The volume is quite fully illustrated, and contains in addition to the report proper three contributions: a Calendar of the parchment scrolls earlier in date than 1600, in the possession of the Museum; some notes on Legends and Superstitions among the Finnish settlements and in Lapland; and an illustrated study of the ornaments on various pieces of furniture and household goods made by an unknown wood-carver and carpenter from Ringebu in Norway.

-To be remarked in the October Century is a sensible discussion of the Trust problem by Prof. John B. Clark of Columbia University. He sees clearly two truths which all must come to see before any real progress can be made towards settling that problem, as a disturbing factor in modern political and industrial development-namely, that it is useless to fight against the mere fact of a much greater unification of similar business interests than we have known in the past, and, on the other hand, that such unification is sure to develop evils dangerous to society and the State in the absence of careful legal regulation. The natural laws of trade can be depended upon to interfere with the exaction of exorbitant prices when those prices reach a certain level; but that level is so high that the careful Trust manager can keep safely below it, and still wring from the consumer prices that are essentially oppressive and detrimental to the best interests of society as a whole. Professor Clark's positive counsel is to avoid quixotic efforts at "Trust-smashing." and centre attention carefully upon the points where the unfair exactions of these combinations are brought to bear, such as discriminations favoring the big shipper in railroad rates, cutthroat competition against the independent dealer in given localities or in given classes of goods, and "factor's agreements"-refusing to supply the local dealer with a given Trust-made article unless he binds himself not to buy a similar article from the independent manufacturer. With proper safeguards at these points, it is reasonably maintained that independent competition would meet the Trust at a much lower level of prices to the consumer than under present conditions, and to secure just this result must be the aim of any really practicable measures of relief.

-Elizabeth Luther Cary essays in Scribner's what many would regard as the impossible task of establishing "Americanism" as the foremost among the salient qualities of the literary work of Henry James. Admitting the meagreness of his American experience and associations, the American character, she thinks, is portrayed in the majority of his many novels with remarkable sympathy and understand. ing Her description of the characters resulting from this sympathetic insight is quite flattering. They appear against the foreign background provided for them in "an air of their own, a clear medium of innocence enriched by intelligence," and from this medium they shine forth "youthful, bright, incorruptible, confiding, expectant," remarkable in the depth of their temperamental refinement and their inability to think coarsely of their relations with their fellow-beings. With an intense thirst they bring this unsophisticated, receptive temperament to the deep wells of transatlantic civilization, expand and ripen with the draughts, and then return to us "rejoiced or sometimes chastened" (can they even gild refined gold or paint the lily over there?). "but singularly unspotted and unimpaired." Doubtless we should all be glad to have just as much as possible of such Americanism here at home: but after all it is the Americanism of Mr. James himself which is in question, and those who deny him this quality will scarcely feel themselves refuted when they find the writer admitting that he has exploited the land of his nativity chiefly "as a place from which to escape whole-hearted to the homes of traditions and symbols, of faint, fragrant messages from the past, and long-established institutions." Mr. F. A. Eaton, the Secretary, contributes the first of a series of illustrated papers on the Royal Academy.

-We have too long delayed noticing 'Diderot's Thoughts on Art and Style' (London: Rivingtons), selected and translated by Beatrix L. Tollemache—a second edition. Mrs. Tollemache seems to have done her work well, and the book should be welcomed as giving to English readers some notion of the ideas on art of the French critic who has attained one of the highest reputations. As one might gather from that critic's admiration for the worst pictures of Greuze (though he could see the faults of coloring in them), the reputation was founded on little real knowledge of or sympathy with painting. It was the accident of Grimm's asking him for some notes on the Salon that first turned his attention seriously to that art, and he always looked at it very much from the outside. He was a humanitarian, a philosopher, one of the preparers of the Revolution, and he preached Rousseau's "Return to Nature." Hence his love for Greuze's moralities (this artist's immoralities are much more painterlike), and hence his attacks on the academic in art, which sometimes give a deceptively modern air to his writings. In reality, he saw little beyond the subject and its treatment from an intellectual point of view, and he could write a formal article on "Composition" without mentioning the arrangement of lines or spaces. Often, in his "Salons," he dwells not even on the subjects of the pictures he is nominally discussing, but on anything that comes into his head which is not the picture. The most fumbling and awkward of the "conferences" of the old Academy show more real knowledge of the aims of art than was possessed by this brilliant writer. Strangely enough, the Revolution of which Diderot was a precursor, produced, in the school of David, an art the most rigidly academic that the world has ever seen.

-In a moderate-sized volume entitled 'Dante and the English Poets from Chaucer to Tennyson' (Henry Holt & Co.) Prof. Oscar Kuhns offers a somewhat sketchy study of the external traces of Dante's influence upon English verse. Although the author shows here, as in his previous literary investigations, evidence of scholarship and judgment, one cannot help regarding all the first half of the book as rather perfunctory and superficial. Certainly nothing is added by him to our knowledge, for instance, of Chaucer's indebtedness to Dante. Occasionally he even seems to overlook the essential feature of the passages he is discussing. In Longfellow's

"The ice about thy heart melts as the snow On mountain heights, and in swift overflow Comes gushing from thy lips in sobs of shame," as compared with the Italian:

"Lo gel che m' era intorno al cor ristretto Spirito ed acqua fèssi, e con angoscia Per la bocca e per gli occhi usci dal petto," the characteristic part of the figure is surely not, as Dr. Kuhns appears to imply, "melts as the snow on mountain heights. but "the ice about thy heart melta . and . . . comes gushing from thy lips in sobs of shame," which is obviously enough a translation of the words of the "Purgatorio." It may be noted in passing that Milton's episode of "the change of the fallen angels to snakes" is far closer to the "Inferno" than to Ovid; while, on the other hand, many of the parallel passages cited on pages 101-104 have little or nothing in common. It is not until we reach the nineteenth-century writers, who occupy about half of the book, that we find the author independent enough to be thoroughly interesting. This part of the work, which is evidently, in the main, the fruit of firsthand reading and reflection, contains much that is of value. Throughout the volume copious quotations from the English poets add to the reader's pleasure. A comic relief is afforded by the selections from Leigh Hunt's 'Story of Rimini.'

The death of John Foster Kirk, which took place on the 21st of September, at his home at Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, was the passing away of a man of letters of the older generation, who of late years had come little before the notice of the general public, whose one important work was published forty years ago, but who maintained to the very end of his life of fourscore years a constant quiet activity in some form or other of scholarly or literary work, and a wide interest in literatue and thought. Mr. Kirk was born in Fredericton, N. B., in 1824, and in 1842 came to Boston, where he was engaged in proofreading and reviewing; the task of supplying the punctuation to the first edition of Emerson's poems being among those that fell in his way. The first impulse to historical research came to him during his eleven years' service as secretary to William H. Prescott, with the opportunities thus thrown in his way of access to authorities and association with scholars and men of letters in this country and abroad. When, after Prescott's death, he turned to work of his own, and to a topic on which his mind had already been for some time engaged, the career of the great Duke of Burgundy, he left nothing untouched which could throw light upon his subject, collecting himself a considerable number of rare chronicles and memoirs of the period, visiting the scenes of Charles's victories and defeats, and seeking diligently after fresh material in the French and Swiss archives. The first two volumes of the 'History of Charles the Bold' were published by John Murray in London and by J. B. Lippincott in this country, in 1863; the third volume came out in 1868. The work, though received with much cordiality by scholars here and abroad, including the highest Continental authorities on the subject, had not the wide sale which Murray had been led to expect for it by Dean Milman and others, who had expressed enthusiastic estimates in regard to it. The trouble may have been with the bloody character and acts of its hero. But this Life still remains the most important work on its subject. It was a loss to letters that its author's riper years should have been passed in occupations which afforded little opportunity for the prosecution of further labors in the field of historical research. In 1870 Mr. Kirk became editor of Lippincott's Magazine, and with the Lippincott house he was ever after associated. The revised edition of Prescott's works which they brought out in 1873-6 was prapared by him, and contains supplementary notes from his hand; and after he had retired, in 1886, from the conduct of the magazine, he prepared the Supplement to Allibone's 'Dictionary of Authors,' by which Allibone's work is continued down to 1888. His contributions to periodic literature, mostly unsigned, included personal reminiscences of Carlyle, Thackeray, and Rossetti. Mr. Kirk was for two years, 1886-8, Lecturer on History at the University of Pennsylvania, and the degree of LL.D. was conferred on him by that institution. He was a member of the Massachusetts Historical Society till his removal to Philadelphia, when he was elected an honorary member. In the early days of the Nation he was an occasional contributor to its columns.

-The announcement from Yokohama that Lafcadio Hearn died in Tokio, September 26, of heart trouble, did not surprise those who knew of the extremely delicate state of his health during the past twelvemonth or longer. In him the world of scholarship loses a keen interpreter of the Japanese people and civilization. Born in 1850, in the Ionian Islands, of a Greek mother and an Irish father, Mr. Hearn seems to have been from childhood intensely susceptible to beauty. At the age of nineteen, he came to America and entered upon journalistic pursuits at New Orleans, afterwards writing for the magazines articles noted for their grace and literary finish. In a trip to the West Indies he enlarged his unusual powers of discriminating and appreciative observation by study of the various races. Attracted to the Chinese and Japanese by reading the works of the French Sinologists, and to the search from the first for the weird beauty of their legends (the italics are Mr. Hearn's own, in his preface to 'Some Chinese Ghosts'), he determined about 1890 to betake himself to Japan. Beginning as a teacher in the south, he rose to be lecturer on English literature in the Imperial University in Tokio. Marrying a native lady and getting naturalized, he withdrew from the society of Occidental folk in Japan, and became a veritable sensitive plate for impressions of the variegated life of Japan. past and present, visible and invisible, in its minute details. He was, as was no other alien, the photographer of the Japanese soul. No one understood more thoroughly the æsthetic asset of Japan's treasure house.

THE GREAT EARL OF CORK

The Life and Letters of the Great Earl of Cork. By Dorothea Townshend. E. P. Dutton & Co. 1904.

When Sir Walter Ralegh became involved in pecuniary and other troubles he sold his Irish estates to Richard Boyle, at that time a lawyer of no great fame, but gifted with good judgment and exceptional energy. The sale took place in 1602-that is to say, on the eve of Elizabeth's death, and before Ralegh had been overwhelmed by his final misfortunes. Coming thus into possession of 42,000 acres of land. Boyle determined to render his property valuable. and so well did he succeed that before long he had gained an earldom, and made himself the richest man in Ireland. Every one knows how it was reserved for others to benefit by Ralegh's colonization schemes, but few are familiar with the career of the man who acquired his estates in Ireland and converted them into the corner-stone of a magnificent fortune:

"In his own day," says Miss Townshend, "Boyle was called the Great Earl of Cork "Boyle was called the Great Earl of Cork as invariably as though it were a part of his title; now his very name is forgotten, save when some Munster antiquary points to a squalid hamlet or a desolate seashore, and tells that here the Great Earl of Cork had his linen factories, yonder he mined for silver, and there stood his sheds for curing pilchards, in the days when he had made the land to prosper."

Richard Boyle, the subject of this biography, was born in Canterbury at the close of 1566, the son of an impoverished gentle-A scholarship at Corpus Christi, Cambridge, gave him his literary education, and, proceeding from the University to London, he was admitted to the Middle Temple. Fortune, however, declined to favor him in any substantial way, until, during the Armada year, he migrated to Dublin. As the Elizabethan grants of land had caused much litigation, he found enough to do, and incidentally formed convictions regarding the potential value of Irish property. The pacification of the island, which occurred in the last years of the Queen's reign, proved a source of immediate advantage to speculators, and Boyle, with natural shrewdness and adequate local knowledge, seized his opportunity. That he had enemies did not prevent him from defeating them and clearing himself of sinister charges in Elizabeth's own presence. From this time forward his advance to prosperity was rapid. By successive stages he became clerk to the Munster Council, member for Lismore in the Irish Parliament, privy councillor for Ireland, and Earl of Cork. The more important of his promotions fell within the reign of James I., his title being secured as most titles were secured in days when baronetcles brought £1,000 apiece. Boyle was a serious-minded if not a religious man, and he always kept a diary. Referring to his earldom, Miss Townshend says:

"His gratitude to Heaven was shown by his choice of a motto. The Earl of Cork's shield ever after bore the plous words, 'God's providence is my inheritance.' His thankfulness to King James was as great as if the hour hed been bestweed out of pure if the honor had been bestowed out of pure grace; to the feelings of those days there was neither degradation nor bathos in the added entry: "The fees whereof in England and Ireland stood me in £305. 4.4 sterl., besides £4,500 sterl. otherwise paid."

Had Boyle been merely a successful speculator in Irish lands who got himself ennobled by cash payments, it is not likely, even in these days of multiplied biographies, that he would be taken as the central figure of an elaborate work. His personality awakens a good deal of interest when once it is interpreted through his journal and letters. Strafford dignified him by fierce and special attack, Cromwell spoke of him in terms of high admiration, and Evelyn says that his wonderful sagacity was equalled by his probity. In the warmth of his family affections he recalls Henry Fox, and his record as a public man will stand far closer scrutiny than Fox's. But most of all he is to be remembered for the success of his attempts to stimulate industries in Ireland. Here his enterprise was due in the first instance to an intelligent sense of selfinterest; yet it would be unfair to deny him the credit of having acted from higher motives than those of selfishness or ambition alone. "He came to Munster." says Miss Townshend, "resolved to show what the English rule in Ireland ought to mean, and to convert a country devastated by war and famine into a rich and contented portion of the Queen's dominions." And if this was his design, the result justified beyond all expectation his boldness and public spirit. Though an Englishman, he gained the confidence of the native population and even of its hereditary leaders. His open-handed hospitality endeared him to a convivial race, and opposition to Catholicism did not prevent him from maintaining friendly relations with Catholic chiefs.

Boyle sought to Anglicize Munster with all completeness, but his methods were those of a sensible, good-hearted man. To lawlessness he opposed peace, and to semibarbarism the agencies of an industrial civilization. So numerous were the enterprises which he set afoot that it is difficult to give a just idea of them in a few words, but Mississend indicates their general tendency when she says:

"Under his fostering care, comfortable farmhouses sprang up in the deserted valleys, lonely sea-bays were changed into harbors crowded with fishing-smacks sud harbors crowded with fishing-smacks and merchantmen, among the barren mountains were seen the glow of his iron forges, his water-mills and salmon wears were found on every stream. In the eastern part of the Province he rebuilt the towns that had been ruined in the Desmond wars, and among the impassable western forests he founded the frontier towns of Bandon, Clonakilty, Enniskeane, and Castletown, to hold the settled country secure against the raids of the wild tribes of West Carberry and Kerry."

The most interesting branch, perhaps, cf his activities was the mining industry. | publication of Lord Holland's biography of

While he gained little by his search for capper, he discovered lead and silver in prontable quantities, besides building up extensive iron works at Ballyregan, Cappoquin, Mocollop, Ardglyn, Kilmacoe, and Lisfinnon. "The ore is said by a contemporary to be hematite, bog-iron ore, and clay ironstone; and Boyle worked it into all sorts of forms, from bar iron for export to the Tallow knives he sent to Lady Carew as a Christ. mas present. In seven years he made 21,000 tons of bar iron, worth at £18 a ton the immense sum of £378,000." A striking personal touch is that Boyle was by theory a free-trader in an age when the short cut to wealth lay through a grant of monopoly.

To give some idea of the power which the Earl of Cork gained through the application of business methods to the exploitation of Munster, we may say that he could levy from his own estates an army of 1,679 foot and 501 horse. With such military resources and a command of ready money which was almost unique at this period, he became a mark for the exactions of Strafford when the principles of absolutism were being applied to Ireland under the form of Thorough. As land titles had been very unsettled during the reign of James I., when Boyle was acquiring most of his enormous property, there was no lack of technical grounds upon which to attack him. For some time he could not tell whether he would be completely ruined through Strafford's hostility or whether he would get off with the payment of a fine. In 1636 the blow fell, and he was forced to pay the Crown £15,000 on the score of having acquired lands at Youghal by irregular means. Everything considered, he escaped lightly so far as his purse was concerned, but the form of his humiliation remained a lasting source of vexation to him. The close of his life was rendered distressful by the Irish rebellion of 1641, and the destruction through its means of much that he had accomplished. Nevertheless, his work in Munster represents the best effort made by the English in Ireland during the first part of the seventeenth century, and won for him high praise in high quarters. According to Cromwell, Ireland would have escaped the rising of 1641 had there been but one Earl of Cork in every province.

Miss Townshend deserves hearty thanks for having given us a complete picture of Boyle's life. Her book is scholarly and discriminating as well as sympathetic. That she has delicacy of perception may be seen from her concluding words. After sketching a life which was full of getting and spending, she breaks off with a reference to higher things:

"The dust of well-nigh two centuries and a half has gathered over the glories of the great Earl of Cork; his wealthy eldest son is forgotten; even the brilliant Orrery and gallant Shannon are no more to us than names. Of all the Boyle family only one is familiar to us to-day, Robert the philoso-pher, who never made money, nor accepted a title, nor desired to rule over any kingdom but that of his own gentle spirit."

RENNERT'S LIFE OF LOPE DE VEGA.

The Life of Lope de Vega (1562-1635). By Hugo Albert Rennert, Professor in the University of Pennsylvania. Philadelphia: Campion & Co. and J. J. M'Vey. 1904.

It is nearly one hundred years since the the Spanish dramatist, and his was the last extensive work in English on the subject. In the meantime fresh facts have been brought to notice by several critics and historians, notably by Ticknor, Von Schack, La Barrera, Pérez Pastor, and Asenjo Barbierl, so that the time is ripe for the harvesting of many new details of information. Professor Rennert's book is all the more opportune in view of the revival of Lope's fame, so long unjustly eclipsed by that of Calderón. In the eyes of the outer world. Calderón had been exalted by the German Romantics to a position of dramatic preeminence which he was not entitled to claim for his sole possession. A reaction in favor of Lope was inaugurated in the German-speaking territory by Grillparzer, and a similar impulse toward an equitable adjustment of literary rights has been manifested in John Rutter Chorley's articles in such English periodicals as the Athenæum and Fraser's Magazine. Of late Lope's own countrymen have taken steps in the direction of the complete rehabilitation of his glorious memory, for the Spanish Academy has entered on the printing of a magnificent new edition of his dramatic works under the able direction of the prince of Spanish literary critics, Menéndez y Pe-

Mr. Rennert has utilized all that his predecessors in the field of investigation had to offer him, and he has added thereto a wealth of information which his own extensive researches have well qualified him to state with the weight of authority. Step by step he has followed the checkered course of Lope's career, chronicling his liaisons no less than his legitimate matrimonial adventures, and listing and characterizing his many literary productions in the order of their composition and publication, interpreting them, too, whenever they seemed to have bearings upon the author's private life. If he has not hesitated to make known the obvious infamy of procedure in Lope the man, he has been prompt to eulogize the positive achievements of Lope the brilliant and original dramatist. Sanity and fairness have moved him in his endeavor to provide us with a comprehensive account of the doings of one of the world's imperishable geniuses, the Phoenix of Spain, as even Lope's own contemporaries called him.

In no case more than in that of Lope de Vega is it necessary for the modern reader to dissociate the inglorious life of the man from the splendid labors of the poet. The known blemishes in the character of a Shakspere affect hardly at all our estimate of the transcendent value of the dramatist; there is no little danger that the moral blots on Lope's personality will sadly impair the lustre of the writer, if they be not sedulously kept out of view. For Lope was a strange compound of sensuality, pettiness, servility, and genius. Fortunately, this last quality outweighed all the others. Still a very young man, he was brought to trial for a scandalous libel upon a woman whom he had loved and upon her family. and as a well-deserved punishment for his crime he was exiled from the kingdom of Castile for two years under pain of death, and was banished from the capital for a still longer period; later on, he seems to have been arrested for cohabitation. Twice married, he figured constantly in amours of which children were the result. Even after taking Holy Orders for the express purpose of "bringing order into his disorder." he fell again from grace; and this affair, the basest of all, was with a married woman. Furthermore, while engaged in his own erotic pursuits, he acted as a poetical pander, and indited love ditties intended for the mistresses of his patron, the Duke of Sessa. It was not heedlessly, either, that Lope sinned and sinned again. His correspondence shows that he realized the enormity of his conduct: repentance was ever on his lips: his spirit was very willing to reform, but his flesh was deplorably weak as long as lusty youth and manhood lasted. Then, when old age came upon him, when his vanity was wounded repeatedly by the favor shown to playwrights of a younger generation and the popular neglect of himself, the poor sinner's heart was broken and his end hastened by two grievous calamities-the loss of his son Lope and the elopement of his daughter Antonia. Retribution came upon him in this world; let the world forgive and forget his frailties.

Turning now to the contemplation of Lope the author, who dominated as its crowning figure the golden age of Spanish letters, one is overcome with sheer amazement at the magnitude of his literary labors carried on despite the distractions of a life of moral turpitude. Practically all the more important forms of verse composition were essayed by him, and although he may not have developed any exceeding degree of skill in his epic endeavors, he undoubtedly attained to success in his pastorals and lyrics, and scored innumerable triumphs with his plays. The poetical worth of his ballads has rightly been ranked very high by Mr. Rennert, who has felicitously rendered into English some of the typical among them, just as he has ingeniously interpreted the autobiographical references contained in the pastorals. It is with Lope's plays, however, that the world is mainly concerned, and the number of these almost overtaxes one's credulity. According to a statement made by the poet himself in his "Egloga & Claudio," he composed no fewer than 1,500 plays, exclusive of the autos or short religious pieces. In the panegyrical 'Fama Postuma,' his disciple and biographer. Montalvan, put the figure at 1,800. The critics are prone to regard these numbers as greatly exaggerated, but, after all allowances are made, Lope's fertility still remains prodigious. If we may credit another assertion of his, he wrote more than 100 of his comedias within the space of twenty-four hours each. Of this vast dramatic output there are actually known to us at present some 431 come." clearly, enough for the abiding fame of any one author; and, in him who reads systematically any considerable number of them, wonder increases steadily at the unfailing originality shown by Lope in the devising and unravelling of so many plots, not to speak of the extraordinary talent revealed in his harmonious blending together of a multitude of varying metres. Mr. Rennert has read deeply into Lope, his favorite author, of whose pieces he himself possesses no fewer than 300, and he thus states his judgment respecting them:

'In all the countless number of his plays, judging from the many that I have read, I will make bold to assert that there is not one which is wholly bad—not one without repeated bursts of lofty poetry which only a splendid genius could have written."

It is interesting to note that Lope was entirely cognizant of the fact that his plays do not as a rule observe the precepts of classicism. This is attested by characteristic remarks in his treatise 'The New Art of Making Plays' (Arte nuevo de hacer comedias), some of which have been translated by Mr. Rennert. In this wise, for example, does Lope explain his attitude with regard to the classic art of dramatic composition and the methods in vogue in his time:

"Noble wits, the flower of Spain, you ask me to compose for you a treatise on the Art of Making Plays which may be ac-ceptable to the public of the present day. ceptable to the public of the present day. Easy this subject appears, and easy it would be for any one of you who has written less comedias and who knows more about the art of writing them. But what is a disadvantage to me in this matter is my having written them against the rules of art. Not because I was ignorant of the precent for while attill a true is grant and the precent. precepts, for, while still a tyro in grammar, I read the books which treat of them, yes, I did it even before I was ten years old. because I found that at that time the come-dias in Spain were not as their first in-ventors thought they should be written, but rather as they were treated by the bar-barians who accustomed the vulgar to their ordities; and so they introduced them in such a way that he who would now write according to the rules of art would die without fame and without reward, for custom is more powerful than reason, in those who lack reason's light. True it is that I have sometimes written following the rules that are known to few, but as soon as I that are known to few, but as soon as I see the monsters, full of apparitions, coming forth, to which flock the public and the women, who canonize this sad spectacle, then forthwith do I return to my barbarous custom: and when I have to write a comedia I lock up the precepts with six keys, cast Terence and Plautus from my study. so that they may not cry out—for truth is wont to speak aloud even in mute books—and I write according to the art which they invented who sought the vulgar applause. For, as the common herd pays for them, it is meet to speak to them like an ignoramus, in order to please them

The self-depreciation expressed in such statements is not to be taken too literally, of course.

The usefulness of Mr. Rennert's clear exposition of facts appertaining to Lope de Vega's life and work is increased by the appendices, in which he reprints from Pérez Pastor and La Barrera the record of Lope's trial for slander and the poet's several wills and testaments, and above all by his including within the covers of his book an admirable catalogue of Lope's plays. This catalogue, which at the last moment he substituted for one prepared by himself, is a recast of John Rutter Chorley's 'Catalogo de Comedias y Autos de Frey Lope Félix de Vega Carpio,' originally published in the fifty-second volume of the "Biblioteca de Autores Españoles." Chorley revised this earlier form of his work, and bequeathed the interleaved copy containing his corrections and additions to the British Museum. There it lay until Mr. Fitzmaurice-Kelly called its existence to the attention of the present editor, who has provided it with supplementary information not available in Chorley's time.

In conclusion, the book may safely be recommended to those who desire in English a good account of the life of the greatest of Spanish playwrights. It is excellently printed, and, though bulky (for it extends to nearly six hundred pages), it has but few errata. Most of these have been noted at the end in a list following a good general index.

The Quintessence of Ibseniam. By G. Bernard Shaw. New York: Brentano's. 1904.

Thirteen years have passed since Mr. Shaw first published his essay on Ibsen. It had been read as a paper before the Fabian Society in London at a time when the Fabian policy had a certain vogue, or at least a degree of notoriety. The Fabians, under the presidency of Mrs. Annie Besant, put up a lively debate, and Mr. Shaw had to defend his thesis against some of the keenest wits in London. Shortly after, several of Ibsen's plays were performed before the British public, which greeted them with so perfect a lack of comprehension that Mr. Shaw came to the rescue with this essay.

According to Ibsen himself, a normally built truth has a life of twenty years at most. But its life does not begin until it is generally known and pretty generally accepted-is, in fact, no longer interesting to the pioneer. Ibsen in his old age, the Socrates of Norway, faces a society grown more tolerant, but hardly more receptive, of his ideals than when Mr. Shaw began to defend them. Mr. Shaw's thesis, therefore, bears reprinting, because it is still in that stage so fascinating to the reformer when he can count on its being labelled even by intelligent critics as immoral, or cynical, or paradoxical. It would be a dull world for Mr. Shaw, the playwright, if his playgoers should be transformed into philosophers who could not be shocked or astonished or mystified. As it is, he may rest in the assurance that the majority of those who see his plays or read his books are far from bringing a premature old age on his theories by accepting them.

What Mr. Shaw sets out to explain is the moral doctrine that Ibsen desires to impart, the cure which he attempts to apply to the complicated Scandinavian soul. He is not concerned with Ibsen's æsthetics nor with his development. He passes by the question whether such and such a play is classical, romantic, or naturalistic, and what stage of Ibsen's philosophy it may mark. Mr. Shaw deals with twelve plays only, beginning with "Brand" and observing the chronological order down to "Hedda Gabler," the last play published when he wrote this essay. These twelve plays all illustrate the effect of idealism on society, and aim to prove that "the real slavery of to-day is slavery to ideals of virtue." an ideal he means a fancy picture, a sort of mask which society has not the courage to do without. So immortality is the mask fixed on the face of death; the sanctity of the institution of marriage disguises more than one brutal truth, and so on. The realist, who is in the proportion of one in a thousand, is he who is strong enough to face the truth which the rest, whether they be Philistines or idealists, are shirking. He is, in fact, the "Superman" of Mr. Shaw's last play, who is, however, in the end defeated by the convictions embodied in a woman determined to marry him and cure him of speaking the truth about the facts of life. That, from Ibsen's point of view (which Mr. Shaw adopts), is a melancholy triumph of society over the individual, "that most precious pearl," which, says M.

Brandes, a Scandinavian, Kierkegaard presented to his epoch.

The typical villain of an Ibsen play will. therefore, be an idealist who imposes the outmoded ideals of society on some unhappy individual, who may, of course, be himself, as with Brand, who sacrificed himself, his wife and child. The heroine will be an "unwomanly woman," a Marie Bashkirtseft or a Nora rather than an Agnes. The realist, the sane man in such a community, is he or she who asserts the claim of the real in defiance of every fetter forged by society. Mrs. Alving in "Ghosts" was responsible for the tragedy of her son's life because she accepted the idealistic teaching of Pastor Manders and returned to her dissolute husband instead of leaving him free to follow his temperament and asserting the claims of her own. Nora, however, though she is almost crushed by the selfish idealism of Helmer, has more character than Mrs. Alving, and in her the rights of the individual are avenged. In the "Wild Duck" Ibsen satirizes the incorrigible idealist who insists on telling the truth and so destroying the peace of a household made happy by romantic illusions. We cannot all face the truth: the average man needs a vital lie to support him, and the idealistic busybody learns from the tragedy of the "Wild Duck" that ideally frank relations between a husband and wife cannot be manufactured from without. "Rosmersholm" has seemed to most critics of Ibsen to be a volte-face, a proof that Ibsen had gradually, and in profound discouragement, come to accept the fact that the development of the individual. the assertion of the pagan ideal of the right to live and enjoy, might have to yield after all to the Christian ideal of renunciation. It is the voice of Musset:

When Rebecca West explates her selfishness by her death and the death of Rosmer, the Rosmersholm conventional ideal of morality triumphs. But Mr. Shaw, to maintain his thesis, prefers to believe, not that "Rosmersholm" is Ibsen's adieu to the cult of nature which he preached in "Ghosts"—a confession that a society which has accepted the Christian ideal cannot react to paganism; he regards it rather as one more instance of the fatal effects of idealism, a protest against the Rosmersholm view of life, the view that denied to Rebecca the right to live and be happy. The woman, right to live and be happy. The woman, says Mr. Shaw, had the higher light when she asserted her individuality at the cost of another's life.

'Malgré nous, vers le Ciel il faut lever les yeux."

Here, at any rate, we believe that Mr. Shaw's theory has carried him away. When Ibsen's followers represent him as adopting the "Greek view" of life, the desire to grasp at enjoyment and to give youth its due, they forget that the Greeks would have considered the death of Rebecca and Rosmer as the only fitting explation of their crime. Even Hedda Gabler, says Mr. Shaw, acted at the dictates of a fatal and outworn idealism—only, in this case, she made wrongdoing her ideal. This strikes one as an over-ingenious interpretation of a play whose motives are already complex enough. Hedda's fierce egoism is rather a warning against the ideal of Mrs. Alving when it is envisaged by a woman without scruples and without soul.

The critics of Ibsen are of course drawn from all of the three classes into which Mr.

Shaw divides society. Needless to say, he is himself the realistic critic. If his reading of the plays should be generally accepted by his readers, he would at once understand that he or Ibsen, or both, had become oldfashioned and must be swept away. Few people, however, even now, read Ibsen with any sort of desire to find out what he is driving at or which side he takes. Mr. Shaw's essay must at least have the effect of rousing their curiosity, for they will find that to understand it they must constantly turn to the plays and regard them not as curious and fantastic studies of Scandinavian society, but as an array of types which, like the characters of Theophrastus, flourish in all societies and at all times.

The Story of Chamber Music. By N. Kilburn. Charles Scribner's Sons.

While the Englishman who wrote this book is conductor of the Middlesborough, Sunderland, and Bishop Auckland musical societies, his taste seems to incline him particularly to a form of music which requires no conductor at all. He poses the question which of the great forms of musical composition it would be preferable to plead for in case all the others were doomed to destruction, and answers that it is certain that many a musician would, if forced to such a choice, "without hesitation pledge himself to uphold the claims of chamber music; for who can measure the almost infinite variety and charm which it affords, and that, too, with the slenderest means? Probably no other form of music would wear so well as this, and to hardly any other could we turn, day by day, with such abiding satisfaction."

It is to be feared that not five per cent. of music lovers in general would agree with Mr. Kilburn in his preference. The vast majority of them would vote for the opera, while lyric song, pianoforte, and orchestral music would all have returns far ahead of chamber music, which, except in Berlin and in some other German centres, plays but a small rôle among musical entertainments. At the same time it would be wrong to gauge the popularity of instrumental quintets, quartets, trios, and duos by the frequency with which they are heard in public. Chamber music, like lyric song and planoforte music, is heard to best advantage not in a concert hall, but in a private music room of moderate dimensions. The playing of it in a large auditorium is a concession to the desire of hearing the great artists in such music, and the necessity of having an audience large enough to compensate them. Amateurs, moreover, seldom have sufficient technical ability to quite do justice to many of the masterworks in this domain of art.

Whatever one's individual preferences may be, it cannot be denied that an addiction to chamber music, at home or in the concert hall, is a healthy sign of musical life and progress, and cannot be commended too highly. Those who incline to make experiments in this direction will find Mr. Kilburn's book a useful manual. It considers the history of chamber music from the earliest times to Brahms and Dvoråk, Richard Strauss and Bruckner, and the opinions advanced are usually sound. Judging by the comparative allotment of space, the author has more sympathy with the older composers than with the modern schools. Tchaikovsky and Grieg, in particular, are treated at much less length than they deserve, which is the more surprising inasmuch as a Russian composer entirely unknown to fame, Gretchaninoff, has twelve pages devoted to him, while Tchaikovsky has only one. The exalted position of Schubert among chamber music composers also is hardly realized by our author.

This book has copious illustrations in musical type, pictures of composers and players, autographs, and an appendix containing brief biographic notes, besides a glossary of terms, in which, for example, the principal variety of chamber music, the string quartet, is thus defined:

"The instruments which form this combination, viz., the two violins, viola, and violoncello, are, as to their construction, the result of a slow development of probably 1,000 years, the fully developed violin dating from about the end of the fifteenth century. Music for the string quartet came into vogue about the middle of the eighteenth century. Earlier than this such music usually took the form of the sonata à tre, viz., two violins and bass."

The Letters and Speeches of Oliver Cromwell.

With Elucidations by Thomas Carlyle.
Edited in three volumes, with notes, supplement, and enlarged index, by S. C. Lomas. With an Introduction by C. H.
Firth, M.A. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1904.

The present edition of Carlyle's 'Cromwell' contains a thorough overhauling of the work by Mr. Lomas as collator, and Mr. Firth as critic. In one way it is unfortunate for this famous book that the era of the Civil War and the Protectorate should have been studied with such minute care by Gardiner and others during the past half century. Judged by modern standards of learning and accuracy. Carlyle is open to grave reproach, even when we have assigned his classic to the field of literature rather than of history. For example, he is always covering with sarcasm the antiquaries. like Birch and Noble, to whom he is indebted for guidance and material. Yet, as Mr. Lomas shows by the most explicit proof, they were often right, while Carlyle went wrong by neglecting to read the plain statements of fact which are contained in ' their books. Thus, he says: "Dorothy Cromwell . . . has a 'little brat'; but the poor little thing must have died soon: in Noble's inexact lists there is no trace of its ever having lived." Noble, however, gives the exact date of birth, and tells us that the "little brat" lived to be over eighty. Carlyle might well have spared numerous anathemas against his predecessors. and profited by using with more care what they had left behind them. At least this would be our comment if Carlyle could be tried by the standard applied to the ordinary historian.

But when a man reaches the measure of a prophet, he cannot be grouped with the historicus officinalis, and has not Mr. Birrell called Carlyle the greatest figure in English letters since the death of Johnson? His 'Cromwell' was designed to be an artisfic piece of interpretation, and the merits which won it recognition in 1846 belong to it still despite Gardiner et al. Carlyle first disclosed to the English world an essential historical fact, namely, that Cromwell was neither fanatical nor hypocritical.

but honest. From the first he carried public opinion with him, and though a few years ago Parliament declined to vote a statue to the Protector, the debate abounds in acknowledgments of his true greatness. And, furthermore, Carlyle took exactly the right means to accomplish his purpose, for by publishing the text of the letters he presents Cromwell (picturesque editing notwithstanding) as he actually was. From the nature of its effect upon the general sentiment, Carlyle's 'Cromwell' is more important than his 'Frederick' or his 'French Revolution'

Historical errors abound in it-not slight ones, like the fate of Dorothy Cromwell's "little brat"-but vitiations of the gravest character, such as the reiterated statement that Cromwell was a despiser of parliaments. Reading his own present-day philosophy into the events of the period, and limited by a large ignorance of English history prior to the Civil War, Carlyle worked out some singular results. Of these two shortcomings his prejudice against parliaments was on the whole the more fruitful source of perversion. He either did not know or would not admit that Cromwell protected the Long Parliament from the army for above a year before he suppressed it, and enacted the celebrated scene only in the last resort. Furthermore, Carlyle misrepresents the whole tenor of the political development which follows 1653. As Mr. Firth says in his introduction:

"When Cromwell had put the key of the House in his pocket, and had sent the members about their business, he did not decree (as Carlyle would have done) that henceforth there should be no more talkingshops in England. On the contrary, the first thing he did was to call another, in order 'to divest the sword of all power in the civil administration,' and when that failed, he called a second and a third. For Cromwell's political ideal was not a government without parliaments, but a government which worked with and through parliaments. Without the consent of the people of England in Parliament assembled he knew that he could found nothing permanent, that he could not secure for posterity the civil and religious liberties for which so many men had died."

It is the function of Mr. Firth, in the introduction from which we have just quoted, to put Carlyle's Cromwell into line with the most recent research and with the sanest opinion now current regarding the great Rebellion. The criticism thus called for he has furnished in a manner that exacts exceptional praise, for he has brought learning, insight and literary skill to bear upon a large historical issue. There is much wit in his essay of thirty pages, and among its humors may be mentioned the detailed account of Carlyle's relations with Mr. William Squire of Yarmouth, who, after the first appearance of 'Cromwell,' announced that he possessed the journal of Sam Squire, a Roundhead frooper, and also thirty-five letters of Cromwell himself. These letters Carlyle published in Fraser's Magazine, and held to be authentic against the whole weight of antiquarian opinion. though they contained a good smattering of nineteenth-century phrases. Even when he met Squire he was not enlightened, but found the author of the hoax "fuil of innocence." The episode is curious in itself, and illustrates in a somewhat unexpected manner the working of Carlyle's mind.

Mr. Lomas's contribution to this edition is largely bibliographical, but his painstaking examination of Carlyle's methods as editor is hardly less interesting than the general criticisms of Mr. Firth. We cite his chief generalization, together with a peculiar example which falls under it:

"Taking Carlyle's edition as a whole, the mistakes in the letters are very numerous, but not, as a rule, important. Sometimes, however, they affect the sense, and in such cases Carlyle unhesitatingly inserted words of his own, without reflecting that, as Cromwell was a very accurate writer, he would not be likely to send out letters which needed such 'embellishments' to explain them. See, for instance, Letter XCIII., written to Mr. Mayor on the subject of Richard Cromwell's marriage, and entirely in Cromwell's own hand. Into this short letter Carlyle inserted nineteen words, most of which were quite unnecessary, and one or two misleading. Moreover, where Cromwell speaks of the contingency of Mayor himself having a son, Carlyle (who imagined him to be speaking of Richard) added a note, 'Grandson, i.e. In the next sentence, die means more properly lite.' It is hardly necessary 'to say that, in an important business letter, Cromwell did not say 'son' when he meant 'grandson,' or 'die' when he meant 'live.'"

This edition not only supersedes all cthers, but has much independent value as a piece of erudition.

Belgian Life in Town and Country. By Demetrius C. Boulger. Illustrated. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1904.

This is a painstaking account of Belgium considered from every side-social, political, racial, commercial, industrial, rural, urban, educational, legal, literary, military, and colonial. If the book has a fault it is one in a measure inherent in the subject, namely, that it is not in the national development of Belgium as a modern country that we are mainly interested. Belgium has been created in the last seventy-five years, but, clever as the creation is, it does not much appeal to us. It is a little too French, perhaps, for us to believe it original. This is a pity, for, philosophically considered, the wonderful prosperity of Belgium is the result of an interesting experiment in autonomy and liberal institutions.

Owing to the perversity of the human mind, prosperity and good government do not stimulate the imagination, and consequently the tourist and ordinary reader will care less than they ought for a good deal of Mr. Boulger's information. But the author may fairly reply that he did not write for the tourist and ordinary reader. They are already provided for. The glories of the historic "Low Countries." their treasures of art and architecture, are celebrated more fully by other writers. Mr. Boulgerdoes not by any means pass these subjects over altogether, but has essayed the useful, if humbler, task of showing us Belgium as it is; and this, we think, he has done very well, His picture of Belgium gives just the necessary amount of history; the rest is description. In the opening chapters on Fleming and Walloon, the modern Constitution and the Legislature and electorate, he is perhaps at his best. The study of the mining life of the country in chapter vii. is also valuable in a different way.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK.

Addison, Julia de Wolf. Classic Myths in Art, Roston: L. C. Page & Co. 42 set. Affalo. M. The Truth about Morocco. London: John Lase.

Ames, Joseph S. Text-Book of General Physics.
American Book Company.
Bell, Lilian. At Home with the Jardines. Boston: L. C. Page & Co. $1.50.
Besant, Sir Walter. London in the Time of the Tudors. London: Adam & Charles Black; New York: Macmillan. $7.50.
Bradford, Gamallel, fr. The Private Tutor. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50.
Carman, Bliss. Pipes of Pan. No. 4. Songs from a Northern Garden. Boston: L. C. Page & Co. $1 act.

ton: Houghton, Millin & Co. $1.00.
Carman, Bliss. Pipes of Pan. No. 4. Songs from a Northern Garden. Boston: L. C. Page & Co. $1 net.
Carman, Bliss. The Friendship of Art. Boston: L. C. Page & Co. $1.50.
Davis, William Stearns. Falaise of the Blessed Volce. Macmillan. $1.50.
Douglas, Amanda M. A. Little Girl in Old Chicago. Doud, Mead & Co. $1.50.
Early Western Travels, 1748-1846, Vol. VII. Edited by Reuben Gold Thwaltes. Cleveland: The Arthur H. Clark Company. $4 net.
Elliot, Daniel Giraud. The Land and Sea Mammals of Middle America and the West Indies. Zological Series, Vol. IV. Parts I. and II. Chicago: Field Columbian Museum.
Fetter, Frank A. The Principles of Economics. The Century Co. Field, Walter Taylor. Rome. Two vols. Boston: L. C. Page & Co. $2.40 net.
Gass's Journal of the Lewis and Clark Expedition. With an Analytical Index and Introduction by James Kendail Hosmer. Chicago: A. C. McClurg & Co. $5 net.
Goff, Emmet S., and Mayne, D. D. First Principles of Agriculture. American Book Company. Grok, Alice. Freedom. Boston: Richard G. Badger. $1.
Holland, Rupert S., and Jenks, Robert D. The Citisen's Handbook. (Pennsylvania Edition.) Philadelphia: George W. Jacobs & Co. $1 net.

ger. $1. folland, Rupert S., and Jenks, Robert D. The Citisen's Handbook. (Pennsylvania Edition.) Philadelphia: George W. Jacobs & Co. $1 net.

Hughes-Games, Stephen. Thekla and Other Poems
London: Longmans, Green & Co. 3s. 6d.
Huntington, H. S. His Majesty's Sloop Diamond
Rock. Boston: Roughton, Miffilin & Co. $1.50.
Irwin, Wallace. Nautical Lays of a Landsman.
Dedd, Mead & Co. $1.
Jack, Adolphus Affred. Shelley. London: Archibaic Constable & Co., Ltd. 3s. 6d. net.
Japan in the Beginning of the Twentieth Century.
Fullished by the Imperial Japanese Commission to the Louisians Furchase Exposition.
Johnston, Annie Fellows. The Little Colonel in Arisona. Boston: L. C. Page & Co. $1.50.
Kaye, John Brayshaw. Vashti. Putnams. $1.25.
King, W. Francis H. Classical and Foreign Quotations. New ed. London: J. Whitaker & Sons;
S. King, W. Francis H. Classical and Foreign Quotations. New ed. London: J. Whitaker & Sons;
Lawrence, T. Thoms whitaker & Sons;
Lawrence, T. Town war and Neutrality in the Far East. London: Mar and Neutrality in th

Philipotts, Eden. The Farm of the Dagger. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50.
Potter, A. W. Grammar School Algebra. American Book Company.
Potts, William. More Notes from Underledge. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1 net.
Public Papers of Daniel D. Tompkins, Governor of New York, 1807-1817. Volumes II. and III. Albany: Published by the State of New York.
Rhead, G. Woolliscroft. The Treatment of Drapery in Art. London: George Bell & Sons. New York:
Macmillan. $2.
Rider, Sidney S. The Lands of Rhode Island as They were Known to Caunounicus and Miantunnomn when Roger Williams Came in 1636.
Published by the Author in Providence.
Robinson, James Harvey, Readings in European History. James Harvey, Readings in European History. James Harvey, Readings in European History. How to Cook for the Sick and Conclescent. Philadelphia: Lippincott.
Smith Flord R., and Perry, Arthur C., fr. Geograph of New York. American Book Company. Streeter, John Williams. Doctor Tom. Macmillan. $1.50.
Taber. M. J. The Cathedrals of England. Boston:
L. C. Page & Co. $1.60 net.
Tolstoy, Leo. War and Peace. Translated by Constance Garnett. Three vols. McClure, Philips & Co.
Torrey, Bradford, Nature's Invitation. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.10 net.
Trueblood, Sarah E. Cats by the Way. Philadelphia: Lippincott. $1.25 net.
Webster, Henry Kitchell, Traitor and Loyalist. Macmillan. $2.00.

Henry Holt and Company's Fall Fiction

NEW YORK CITY

Published at 29 West Twenty-Third Street,

Sinclair's THE DIVINE FIRE. (Just Published.) The life and loves of a cockney—the son of a cockney—who became a real poet and fell in with many sorts of people, high and low, artistic and philistine. The author shows sincerity, humor and penetration.

Canfield's FERGY THE GUIDE, and his Moral and Instructive Lies about Beasts, Birds and Fishes.

With some fifty sketches by ALBERT D. BLASHFIELD. $1.50.

N. F. Evening Post:—"He is a wholesouled, thoroughgoing and spontaneous liar, with originality and a real love for his art... a liar who must rank as an artist... his language is as direct and as unforced as his inventions are moral and instructive.... The marginal illustrations by Albert D. Blashfield, informed by a thorough appreciation of 'regy's' humor, add not a little to that enjoyment."

Bacon's (John H.) PURSUIT OF PHYLLIS. (A humorous romance of travel in England, France, China, and Ceylon.)

N. Y. Evening Post: "It is brisk, buoyant, and entertaining. Loomis's MORE CHEERFUL AMERICANS. Illustrated by Florence Scovel Shinn and others, $1.25 The author's "Cheerful Americans" is in its seventh printing. In this new book he tells merry tales of Americans who succeeded under obstacles and of others who were cheerful even in Suburbia. He gently satirizes golf, popular songs, labor unions, "the novel for the masses," and many other things.

Lorimer's (Norma) ON ETNA (A Romance of Sicily to-day.)

$1.50. (October)

Winthrop's (Theodore) Mr. WADDY'S RETURN. Edited by BURTON E. STEVENSON.

$1.50. (October)

The story of Mr. Waddy, who returned to New England from India. The scenes are chiefly in Boston and Newport before the War.

Stevenson's (Burton E.) MARATHON MYSTERY. With five scenes in color by ELIOT KEEN. $1.50 (October)

This story, which has the merits and distinction of the author's popular "Holiday Case," opens with a strange happening in a New York apartment house

Eyre's THE CUSTODIAN. With illustrations by PENRHYN STANLAWS. $1.50. (October) A humorous story of an Englishman under a cloud, who practically became the jailer of an erratic German princess in a lonely place in Scotland.

The Publishers' Illustrated Leaflet of Recent Books, or New Catalogue of General Literature with portraits, free

Autobiography

By ALEXANDER BAIN, LL.D., Professor of Logic and English, University of Aberdeen. With a Supplementary Chapter by WILLIAM L. DAVIDSON, and 4 Portraits. 8vo. $5.00 net. By mail, $5.30.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

93 Fifth Avenue, New York.

AMERICAN HISTORY.—Catalogue of Books published and for sale mailed on request. GEORGE P. HUMPHREY, Rochester, N. Y.

By JOHN OLIVER HOBBES

Author of "Saints and Sinners," etc.

The Science of Life

An Essav

Price, 50 Cents Net. Cloth

SCOTT-THAW CO., 542 Fifth Avenue

International Journal of Ethics.

VOL. XV., NO. 1, OCTOBER, 1904.

VOL. XV., NO. 1. OCTOBER, 1904.

The Bias of Patriotism.
Alfred Jordan, Full, England.

Noral Instruction in Schools.
Herbert M Thompson, Cardiff, Wales.

Husic and Florality.
History.
History

Yearly $2.50. Single number 65 cts

International Journal of Ethics 1305 ARCH ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

H. S. Barnes & Co.'s Announcements Selections from fiction

THE PRESIDENT, A Novel

By Alfred Henry Lewis. Illustrated in colors by Jay Hambidge. 12mo, uniform with "The Boss." $1.50.

A CAPTAIN IN THE RANKS, A Romance of

By George Cary Eggleston. With frontispiece in colors. 12mo, cloth. $1.20 net. (Ready in October.)

THE PAGAN'S PROGRESS

By GOUVERNEUR MORRIS. Illustrated by John Rae. With frontispiece in colors. 16mo, $1.00.

CAP'N ERI

By JOSEPH C. LINCOLN. Illustrated in colors by Charlotte Weber. 12mo, cloth, $1.50. Fifth Edition.

THE HOUSE IN THE WOODS

Life and Nature in the Mountains. By ARTHUR HENRY, author of "An Island Cabin." Each 12mo, cloth. Illustrated, $1.50. Second Edition.

TO WINDWARD

By Henry C. Rowland, author of "Sea Scamps." 12mo, cloth. With frontispiece in color. $1.50. Second Edition.

History

THE JOURNEY OF De SOTO

From Florida to the Mississippi River. Told by the Gentleman of Elvas by Biedma and in the newly-translated account man of Elvas by Biedma and in the newly-translated account of Ranjel, De Soto's private secretary. Edited and introduced by Professor Edward Gaylord Bourne, of Yale University. In the Trail Makers' Series, under the consulting editorship of Professor John Bach McMaster. 12mo, cloth. With illustrations and maps. In two volumes. $2.00.

Circulars of The Trail Makers—a library of history and exploration—on application.

BATTLES OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION, A Military History

By Brig.-Gen. H. B. CARRINGTON. $3.00 net. New Edition.

BARNES' POPULAR HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES

New edition in two volumes. Revised and with additional illustrations. $5.00.

Hew Volumes in the Moman's Home Library

Edited by MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

BEAUTY THROUGH HYGIENE, or Common-Sense Ways to Beauty and Health

By Dr. EMMA E. WALKER, Member of the New York Academy of Medicine.

HOUSE AND HOME

A Practical Book on Home Management. By Miss M. E. CARTER.

THE COURTESIES

A Handbook of Etiquette. By MISS ELEANOR B. CLAPP.

CORRECT WRITING AND SPEAKING

By Miss Mary A. Jordan, Professor of English in Smith

Uniform style with WOMEN'S WAYS OF EARNING MONEY by CYNTHIA WESTOVER ALDEN and the MOTHERS MANUAL by Dr. EMELYN E. COOLINGE.

Each small 12mo, cloth. Illustrated. $1.00, net.

3uvenile

New Volumes in the East and West Series

THE SEARCH, A Story of the Old Frontier By E. P. WEAVER. 12mo, cloth. Illustrated. $1.25. In Press.

THE THREE PRISONERS, A Story of the Great War

By WILLIAM HENRY SHELTON. 12mo, cloth. Illustrated. $1.25. In Press.

Uniform atyle with "THE ARK OF 1803" by C. A. STEPHENS and "NEW FORTUNES" by MABEL EARLE.

RUNNING THE RIVER

A story of Adventure and Success. By George Cary Eg-GLESTON. 12mo, cloth. Illustrated. $1.50.

The first volume in the Outdoor Series

THE ISLAND CAMP, or The Young Hunters of Lakeport

By Capt. RALPH BONEHILL. Illustrated in colors by Jay Hambidge. 12mo, cloth. $1.25.

Modern Business Books

INSURANCE

Practical Book for the Student and Business Man. By T. E. Young, B.A., F.R.A.S. $2.50.

INSURANCE OFFICE ORGANIZATION. MANAGEMENT AND ACCOUNTS

By T. E. Young and Richard Masters. $1.50.

THE CITIZEN

A study of the individual and the SHALER. $1.40, net.

Standard and General LIVES OF GREAT WRITERS' SERIES

With an introduction by Hamilton Wright Mabie.

NAPOLEON

A short biography. By R. M. Johnston, with maps and illustrations. $1.00, net.

IN THE DAYS OF CHAUCER. By TUDOR JENKS. Small 12mo. Illustrated. $1.00, net.

IN THE DAYS OF SHAKESPEARE. By TUDOR JENKS. Small 12mo. Illustrated. $1.00, net. In press. (Others in preparation.)

LEGENDS OF THE RHINE. By H. A. GUERBER. New edition. Illustrated. $1.50, net.

156 fifth Ave.

A. S. Barnes & Co.,

Hew Dork

Important Books from Our Fall List

LIFE OF SHAKESPEARE

By WILLIAM J. Rolff, Litt. D. The publication of this work is a literary event of first importance. It is the latest and most complete biography of Shakespeare, written by one of the foremost living authorities on the subject. Within the 550 pages of text Dr. Rolfe has condensed all the known facts, as well as trustworthy conjectures respecting the life of Shakespeare; also adequate and brilliant criticisms of the plays, somets, and other writings, and all available data regarding portraits, editions and aids to the study of the poet's works. It is fully illustrated, and contains an exhaustive index. Cloth, 8vo, illustrated, $3. Half morocco, $5.

GLOSSARY TO SHAKESPEARE

By Alexander Dyce. The glossary to the complete works of Shakespeare by Rev. Alexander Dyce (1798-1869) is everywhere recognized as a standard work of reference. The present one-volume edition contains all of Dyce's invaluable references and illustrative quotations from Shakespeare, with the addition of several new features, of which the following is perhaps the most noteworthy: Dyce's references are only to volume and page of his own edition. For these, which are useless except to owners of the Dyce edition, references to the particular play, with act, scene and line (numbered to conform with the Cambridge text), or the particular poem, with title and line, have been substituted. Illustrated with portraits, cloth, 8vo, $3. Half morocco, $5.

A SHORT HISTORY OF ANCIENT EGYPT

By Percy E. Newberry and John Garstang. This is a brief history of Ancient Egypt from the founding of the monarchy until the disintegration of the empire three thousand years afterward. The joint authors are experienced students of Egyptian archæology, and this handbook is the ripest fruit of their extensive explorations. It offers the general reader an unusual opportunity of obtaining the results of the very latest scholarship in attractive form. Cloth, 12mo, net $1.20. Postage extra.

JAPAN: The Place and the People

By G. Waldo Browne, with an introduction by Hon. Kogoro Takahira, Japanese Minister to the United States. This work contains a popular account of the Japanese people, their traditions and civilization, from the prehistoric origin of the race to the present time, together with a fascinating description of the topography and scenery of Japan and the strange customs of its inhabitants. The volume contains about 450 pages of text, and includes sixteen exquisite color plates, more than fifty full-page half-tone illustrations from new photographs, and two hundred and sixty text cuts. Cloth extra, large 8vo, net $2.50. Postage extra.

LOVE TRIUMPHANT: A Book of Poems

By Frederic Lawrence Knowles. Mr. John Burroughs pronounced Mr. Knowles's first book of poems "The most fresh and original book of verse that has come to my hand in many a year." Regarding the present volume, Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton writes in a letter to the author: "There was much in your first volume, "On Lite's Stairway," that I greatly liked, but this volume is incomparably finer. . . . You have both variety and individuality. Your note is your own. It I saw an unsigned poem of yours anywhere I should not need to be told whose it was." Cloth, 12mo, cover design by Marion L. Peabody, gilt top, net $1. Postage extra.

COMPLETE WORKS OF EDGAR ALLAN POE New Cabinet Edition

This edition contains all of Poe's short stories, as well as his complete poetical works, criticisms and general essays. It is prefaced by a sympathetic memoir from the pen of the late RICHARD HENRY STODDARD, occupying over two hundred and twenty pages, and contains also brief appreciations by James Russell Lowell and others. The text is printed in large clear type, with wide margins, on laid deckle-edge paper. The edition contains nearly forty etchings and photogravures. Sold in sets or separately. Complete set, 6 volumes, cloth, 12mo, gilt tops, $9; per volume $1.50. Half calf or morocco (in complete sets only), $18.

NEW STERLING SETS

The best Library editions at a popular price. Each volume cloth, 12mo, fully illustrated, at the uniform price of $1; half calf, $2 per volume. Sold in complete sets only. The new Sterling sets comprise the complete works of Charles Lamb, in 5 volumes; Edgar Allan Poe, 6 volumes; Lord Macaulay (Essays), 3 volumes; Captain Marryat, 12 volumes, and Henry Fielding, 7 volumes.

Send for complete descriptive list

DANA ESTES & COMPANY, Boston

A NEW VOLUME IN

The VARIORUM EDITION of SHAKESPEARE

Edited by HORACE HOWARD FURNESS, Ph.D., LL.D., L.H.D.

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST

The thirteen volumes which have already appeared are

MACBETH Revised Edition by HORACE HOWARD FURNESS, IR. ROMEO AND JULIET OTHELLO THE TEMPEST

KING LEAR A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING AS YOU LIKE IT THE WINTER'S TALE

HAMLET (two volumes) THE MERCHANT OF VENICE TWELFTH NIGHT

Royal octavo, gilt top, uncut edges. $4.00, net, per volume. Half morocco, gilt top, $5.00, net, per volume. Postage, 30 cents extra, on Love's Labour's Lost.

"These monumental volumes are the admiration of every true student of Shakespeare," says Dr. WILLIAM ALDIS WRIGHT.

The London Athenœum states, "This, the most exhaustive work on Shakespeare's plays, comes from America."

Dr. J. W. ROLFE declares of a recent volume, "This, too, like its predecessors, is . . . the entire literature of the subject compressed into a single volume, and the more valuable for the editor's personal contributions thereto."

Publishers J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY Philadelphia

OXFORD MODERN FRENCH SERIES

The Delegates of the Oxford University Press have for some time believed that, among the many series of annotated French texts now being issued, the rewas still room for a series to be chosen from the best modern French writers who have already attained to the rank of classics; writers such as Balzac, Gautier, de Tocqueville, Taine. This series which the Delegates are beginning to publish consists not only of romances and short stories, but embraces also narratives of travel, biographies, and essays.

The texts have all been very carefully selected with the hope that this series may commend itself not only to schoolmasters, but also to parents and others who wish those under their charge to read good modern French books, and have hitherto not known what books could be put into their

The series is under the general editorship of Mr. Leon Delbos, M.A., Instructor in French in H. M. S. Britannia.

The following eight volumes have already been issued, and others will be ready very shortly.

Deux Héroines de la Révolution Française, by LAMARTINE. Edited by Mary Bentinck-Smith, Lecturer in Modern and Mediæval Languages in Girton College, Cambridge. 60c.

La Vendetta and Pierre Grassou. By Balzac. Edited by Marie Pechinet, B.A., Lecturer in French in the Royal Holloway College, 50c.

Bug-Jargal. By Victor Hugo. Edited by Louis Sers, Assistant Master in Wellington College. 50c.

Mademoiselle de la Seiglière. By SANDEAU. Edited by A. L. Dupuis, French Master in King's College School. 60c.

Mémoires d'Outre-Tombe. By CHATEAUBRIAND. Edited by Louis Sers, Assistant Master in Wellington College. 60c.

Voyage autour de mon Jardin. By KARR. Edited by Stuart G. Hallam, M.A., Assistant Master in Beechmont Preparatory School, Sevenbaks. 50c.

Le Château de Vaux. by Gozlan. Edited by A. H. Smith, M.A., Modern Language Master in Whitgift School, Croydon. 40c.

Extraits des Voyages d'Alexis de Tocqueville. Edited by J. Mansion, of the Royal Academical Institution, Belfast. 50c.

For Sale by all Booksellers. Send for Catalogue.

WHY!

are the Burrows Brothers classed among the leading booksellers of the country?

Their latest catalog, from the RARE BOOK DEPARTMENT (No. 49), partially explains this fact, and if any one interested in scarce and rare volumes desires a copy of this list they can obtain it by sending their address to the firm at Cleve-

Fine bibliographically or for reference, and absolutely Free.

The Nation.

A WEEKLY JOURNAL OF POLITICS, LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

Established in 1865, The Nation was a pioneer as a journal of literary and political criticism of the highest order, conducted free from the centrol of party, school, or interest of any sort. It has long been a recognized authority at home and abroad. The list of contributors includes most of the leading names in literature, science, art, philosophy, and law in this country, and many of corresponding eminence abroad. The Nation's departments are:

THE WEEK. Brief Comments on the most important current events, domestic and foreign.

EDITORIAL ARTICLES. Careful and moderate discussion of prominent political and social topics.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE. From all quarters of the globe, by intelligent and trustworthy

OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE. Letters to the editor on every subject germane to the scope of the paper.

NOTES. Short paragraphs, chiefly on literary, ntific, musical, and dramatic topics.

REVIEWS OF BOOKS. By able writers and scholars (mainly specialists) of both hemispheres. PINE ARTS. Competent criticism of art exhibitions and works of art, the drama, etc.

The style and form of the paper are chosen with a view to the most suitable shape for binding, and a set of The Nation preserved, bound, and indexed makes the most complete and readable record of current events of importance in the political and literary world available for the American public. Two volumes are completed annually. The index and title-page accompany the last issue of each volume.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE-$3 per year postpaid in the United States, Canada, and Mexico; $4 a year postpaid to other countries included in the Postal Union. Subscriptions for a shorter period taken at the yearly rate. Remittances should be made by check, draft, or money-order, payable to "The Nation." Specimen copies sent free at any time on request. Address

The Nation, New York City.

D. VAN NOSTRAND COMPANY'S

Announcement of Forthcoming Books

ASHE, S. W. and J. D. KEILEY. Electric Railways Theoretically and Practically Treated.

BAUER'S MARINE ENGINES AND BOILERS.

BIRCHMORE, DR. W. H. How to Use a Gas Analysis. 12mo. cloth, Illustrated CATHCART, PROF. WM. L., and J. I. CHAFFEE. Course of Graphic Statics Applied to Mechanical Engineering.

CATHCART, PROF. WM. L., Co'umbia University. Machine Elements; Shrinkage. and Pressure Joints. With tables and diagrams.
—Marine Engine Design.

CHRISTIE, W. W. Boiler Waters, Scale, Corrosion.

PRELINI, CHAS. Earth and Rock Excavation.

SEVER, G, F., and F. TOWNSEND. Laboratory and Factory Tests in Electrical Engineering. 8vo, cloth, illustrate1, about 225 pages.

STODOLA, DR. A. The Steam Turbine. Authorized translation by Dr. L. C. Loewenstein, THOMAS, C. W. Paper Makers' Handbook: A Practical Treatise. Illustrated, VAN NOSTRAND'S YEAR BOOK OF ENGINEERING DATA. With many tables and diagrams. First Year of Issue, 1904.

WALLING, B. T., LIEUT.-COM. U. S. N., and JULIUS MARTIN. Electrical Installations of the United States Navy. With many Diagrams.

Recent Publications

OLSEN, PROF. J. C. Text-book of Quantitative Chemical Analysis, by Gravimetric, Electrolytic, Volumetric and Gasometric Methods. With 72 Laboratory Exercises, giving the analysis of Pure Salts, Alloys, Minerals and Technical Products. 8vo, cloth; illustrated, 634 pp.

MARSH, C. F. Reinforced Concrete. With many tables and 511 figures and diagrams. 8vo, 7½ x 11, cloth, 530 pages.

net, $7.00

RAYMOND, E. B. Alternating Current Engineering, Practically Treated.

SA. OF STATES OF

SEWALL, C. H. Wireless Telegraphy. With diagrams. Illustrated. 8vo, cloth. 200

PAULDING C. P. Practical Laws and Data on the Condensation of Steam in Covered and Bare Pipes, to which is added a translation of Peclet's "Theory and Experiments on the Transmission of Heat Through Insulating Materials." Cloth, illustrated, 102 pp. 8vo, net @2.00

MOSS, SANFORD A. Lay-out of Corliss Valve Gears. 16.no, cloth. illustrated, 50 cents

PUBLISHERS AND BOOKSELLERS

23 Murray and 27 Warren Sts

NEW YORK

A. WESSELS COMPANY

Announce the First Issues in

"Source Books of American History"

ANDREW BURNABY

Travels Through the Middle Settlements of North America, 1759-1760

Small 8vo, cloth, $2.00 net

An educated Englishman's fair-minded account of the condition of the colonies on the eve of the Revolution.

Major-Gen. WILLIAM HEATH

Memoirs of the American War

Small Svo, cloth, (Rendy October 26), $2.50 net. Especially valuable for its accounts of the British retreat from Lexington, the battle of Bunker Hill, and the later engagements about New York. Not reprinted since published by act of Congress in 1798.

W. W. CANFIELD

Legends of the Iroquois, as told by the Cornplanter

FROM AUTHORITATIVE NOTES AND STUDIES New and Enlarged Edition. Illustrated. Small 8vo, cloth, $1.50 net.

Other titles to be announced later,

This series will include some of the best and rarest contemporary volumes of travel, history and biography dealing with the colonial and revolutionary periods and the exploration and settlement of the farther West, and will be edited by Rufus Rockwell Wilson, author of "Rambles in Colonial Byways," "Historic Long Island," etc.

Detailed circular upon request.

A. WESSELS COMPANY 43 East 19th St., New York.

IMPORTANT.

THE FOUR-TRACK NEWS

The Popular Illustrated Magazine of Travel and Education

From 130 to 160 pages each issue, every one of which is of human interest

Subscriptions for 1905 only will be received until December 31st, 1904, at 50 cents per year; to foreign countries $1.00.

After January 1st, 1905, the subscription price will be $1,00; to foreign countries $1.50; at news stands ten cents per copy.

SUBSCRIBE NOW

and take advantage of this extraordinary low rate.

GEORGE H. DANIELS, Publisher, 7 East 42d St.,

OXFORD MAPS.

BY PROP. H. S. OSBORN, LL.D.

Palestine,
Western Asia,
Byyt and Sinai,
St. Paul's Travels.

Oxford Tiap Publishers, Oxford, Ohio,

A History of Matrimonial Institutions

Chiefly in England and the United States

WITH AN INTRODUCTORY ANALYSIS OF THE LITERATURE AND THE THEORIES OF PRIMITIVE MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE

By GEORGE ELLIOTT HOWARD, Ph.D., of the University of Chicago

CONTENTS

ANALYSIS OF THE LITERATURE AND THE THEORIES OF PRIMITIVE MATRIMONIAL INSTITUTIONS

- 1. The Patriarchal Theory
- 2. Theory of the Horde and Mother-Right.
- 3. Theory of the Original Pairing or Monogamous Pamily.
- Rise of the Marriage Contract.
- Early History of Divorce,

MATRIMONIAL INSTITUTIONS IN ENGLAND

- 6. Old English Wife Purchase Yields to Free Marriage.
- 7-8. Rise of Ecclesiastical Marriage. The Protestant Conception of Marriage.
- 10. Rise of Civil Marriage.
- 11. History of Separation and Divorce under English and Ecclesiastical Law.

MATRIMONIAL INSTITUTIONS IN THE HNITED STATES

- 12. Obligatory Civil Marriage in the New England Colonies.
- 13. Ecclesiastical Rites and the Rise of Civil Marriage in the Southern Colonie
- 14. Optional Civil or Ecclesiastical Marriage in the Middle Colonies.
- 15. Divorce in the American Colonies.
- 16. A Century and a Quarter of Marriage Legislation in the United States.
- 17. A Century and a Quarter of Divorce Legislation in the United States.
- 18. Problems of Marriage and the Family. Bibliographical Index. Case Index. Subject

PRESS COMMENTS

This is the most substantial and valuable work on its subject yet produced in our country. Scholarly, scientific, thorough, it is an inductive study of the first importance to every student of the primary social question—the question of the family.—The Outlook.

In the three volumes which constitute this monumental work the learned author has provided the first adequate treatment of the history of human marriage.

The volumes bear on every page the marks of wide and painstaking scholarship.—Quarterly Journal of Economics.

The general reader will peruse the text with sustained interest; he will experience little difficulty in following the author's argument or in appreciating the force and significance of his conclusions. The scholar will find in the numerous footnotes, the extensive bibliography, and the carefully executed index, many additional points of excellence.—The Dial.

cuted index, many additional points of excellence.

—The Dital.

There can be no broader or more complex subject for literary discussion than the development of the human institution called the family. Innumerable are the problems presented. From the remote past the topic bristies with difficulties. The laws relating to marriage and divorce are most complex. The author of "Ar History of Matrimonial Institutions," who has thus imposed on himself a stupendous task, has certainly accomplished his work in a satisfactory manner.—The New York Times.

No student of matrimonial institutions can afford to overlook this work. The amount of learning condensed in Dr. Howard's three volumes is enormous. The bibliographical index alone occupies about 140 pages and the author's footnotes furnish conclusive proof that the innumerable authorities have been not only consulted but thoroughly examined. The task must have exacted the assiduous labor of many years.—New York Sun.

As a whole this work is singularly comprehended.

labor of many years.—New York Sun.

As a whole this work is singularly comprehensive, clear, open-minded progressive and authoritative. It is an interesting and dignified historical monograph.—The Chicage Record-Herald.

Dr. Howard's elaborate study of matrimonisal institutions and legislation affecting alike the binding and the dissolution of the tie is probably the most important work that has appeared on this subject in America.—The Churchman, New York.

Yark.

These volumes must long be considered both as authoritative in statement and as a simulus to future monographs. Professor Howard has accomplished his task in philosophical and historical sprit; with a clearness of statement that inspires confidence and respect; with the controlled enthusiasm of one that is master of his subject and not mastered by it. The work, as a wast storehouse of well-arranged facts, is an honor to American scholarship.—Boston Herald.

Three Volumes, 8vo, Art Buckram, Gilt Top, 1486 pp., $10.00 net, $10.72 postpaid

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS, OR ORDER DIRECT FROM

The UNIVERSITY of CHICAGO PRESS CHICAGO, and 156 Fifth Avenue, NEW YORK

TEAR OFF THIS COUPON AND MAIL IT TODAY

The University of Chicago Press

Please send me, by prepaid express, a set of Professor Howard's History of Matrimonial Institutions. I enclose will remit $10.72 in payment for same.

Peace and Progress"

Peace in Music and Religion; Peace in Love; Peace in Death; Peace in Brotherhood; the historic growth of the Peace Idea. Such is the Unity in Mr. DOLE'S two Symphonic poems, "The Bullding of the Organ" and "Onward." Ready this week. Limited Japan edition, $5; hand-made-paper edition, $2.50. For copies apply to NATHAN HASKELL DOLE, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

SHAKESPEARE'S WORKS

"First Folio Edition"

To be completed in 40 handy volumes, size 4/4x6/4. Sold separately. Cloth, net, 50 cents; limp leather, net 75 cents. (Postage 5 cents.)

Send for Descriptive Booklet.

THOMAS Y. CROWELL & COMPANY 486-428 West Broadway

The Nation

Was established in 1865 as a weekly review of literature, science, art, and politics, and its editorial management has been unchanged from the first. It is conducted in a spirit of complete independence The list of contributors includes most of the leading names in literature, science, art, philosophy and law at home, and many of corresponding eminence abroad. The Nation presents a complete and accurate record of the world's current history, with impartial comment on questions which would occupy the attention of intelligent men. To the scholar, the student, the thinker and to all professional men it is confidently recommended as an aid to sound thinking.

Subscription, $1.00 a year, post-paid. Shorter term at a proportionate rate.

Publication Office, 206-210 Broadway, New York.

SOME OF HARPER'S FALL BOOKS

FICTION

VERGILIUS

By IRVING BACHELLER, Author of "Eben Holden."

tale of the coming of Christ. The scenes are those of ancient Rome in the days of Augustus Czesar, and of Palestine under the dark rule of ferod on the eve of the nativity. The story is one of powerful situations with a rarely delightful love interest.

Post 8vo, Ornamented Cloth, $1.25.

A LADDER OF SWORDS Author of "The Right of Way."

In wholly different vein from the author's last novel. "The Right of Way," comes this exquisite romance of the days of Queen Elizabeth, delightful in conception, swift and compelling in interest, and written in the finished style of th's great novelist. The series on the i-land of Jer-ey are of hyllic fr-shoess and beauty, and in the S-igneur of Rozell, the lori of the island, the author has produced a character of delightful humor and braggadocio.

Illustrated by the Kinneys. Post 8vo, Cloth. $1.50.

JESS & CO.

By J. J. BELL, 'Author of "Wee Macgreegor."

The story of the troubles and happiness of Jess and her deliquent husband Davie is told in the most delightful manner, often through the odd and whimsical sayings of the Scotch characters, Mistress Wallace and Maister Ogilvy. Jess & Co. will probably prove to be Mr. Bell's most successful book. The dialect needs no glossary.

16mo, cloth, $1.25

THE GEORGIANS "By WILL N. HARBEN, Author of "Abner Daniel," "The Substitute," etc.

The scene is that of "Abner Daniel." The story deals with the troubles of two lovers, whom Abner, with generous impulse, ingeniously brings together. There are several subsidiary characters who provide a great deal of mirthful effectsimment. Abner himself, with his shrewd humor, pervades the whole, which is the strongest story of Georgian life Mr. Harben has written.

Post 8vo, Cloth, $1.50

THE FLOWER OF

By ROY ROLFE GILSON

Author of "In the Morning Glow,"
"When Love is Young," etc.

Perhaps no American author of recent years has taken so strong a hold on the affections of his readers as has Mr Gilson. This latest story can be compared only with Prue und I. It is full of quaint humor and sentiment and there are many parts desling with child life, handle with the same simplicity and truth found in Mr. Gilson's earlier stories.

Post 8vo, Cioth, $1.50

THE SON OF ROYAL LANGBRITH Author of "Letters Home," tionable Shanes "

By WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS

"Questionable Shapes," etc.

A new novel, which premises to be the most popular story Mr Howells has written for some time. It deals with a strange situation—that of a woman who conceals from her son the faults and shortcomings of his dead father. The situation is new in fiction and works out to an intensity interesting conclusion involving the love romances of four lives.

Crown 8vo, Special Binding, Uncut Edges, Gilt Top, $2.00

THE TRUANTS

By A. E. W. MASON Author of "The Four Feathers."

An exhilarating story of London life. The Truants are two young narried people living with the rich, overbearing father of the young nan. The plot devel-ps startlingly and rapidly, with exciting incidents nd a certain mystery which adds greatly to the int-rest. It is written a breezy, stimulating style, and is bound to be a success.

Illustrated, Post 8vo, Ornamented Cloth, $1.50

THE LADY OF LOYALTY HOUSE "If I Were King," "The Proud Prince"

By JUSTIN HUNTLY McCARTHY

At the outbreak of the quarrel between King and Parliament, 1642. Lady Harby, the young mistress of Pa by Hall, is the first to fly the King's flar. An attempt on the part of a small body of Parliamentary volunteers to capture Harby ends by leaving the Puritan leader a prisoner in Lady Harby's hands. From this point the story becomes a tale of love that proves greater than the claims of warring factions. It is the most delightful piece of work yet from this author's pen.

Post 8vo, Cloth, $1.50.

MISCELLANEOUS

IMPERATOR ET REX: W.lliam II. of Germany "The Martyrdom of an Empress."

By the author of

The biographer of the Emperor and Empress of Austro-Hungary has here devoted her facile pen and her unrivalled knowledge of the subject to the portraiture of the Kaiser as he really is, of his charming home life, and of his symparh-tic character—presenting him as the warm-hearted and impulsive man rather than as a keen-minded and astute ruler bent on fostering the prosperity and grandeur of his empire. Illustrated with autograph portraits of the emperor and the members of the imperial family.

Grown 8vo, Deckel Edges, Gilt Top, net, $2.25.

THE CYCLE OF LIFE: According to Modern

These essays deal chiefly with the greater problems of the universe—the future fate of the sun. moon, and earth, the laws of gravity and the ether, the wonders of the nebulæ, etc. Mr. Saleeby s manner is little short of fascinating, his language clear, and his attitude op n-minded, making his volume one of the the most readable and inspiring books of the day.

Crown 8vo, net, $2.00.

JUVENILE

JOSEPHINE

ELLEN DOUGLAS DELAND

This is the story of two little girls named Jo and Georgie, who, coming to live with their cousins, create consternation in the family because they are girls and not boys, as their names would indicate. But they bravely win the r way into the hearts of their relatives, and many interesting adventures follow. Illustrated.

Post 8vo. $1.25.

RIVER-LAND

ROBERT W. CHAMBERS

This is the latest volume of the series of nature books, each chapter dealing with the experiences of Peter and Ellen and with some tree animal, or fish growing beside or living in the streams. This has proved a capital plan for instilling natural history into children's minds. With eight full-page illustrations in color by Elizabeth Shippen Green.

Cloth, net, $1.50

LITTLE PRECIDUS

GERTRUDE SMITH

This is a companion volume to The Lovable Tales of Janey and Josey and Jose

HOLIDAY EDITIONS

THE CASTLE COMEDY

By THOMPSON BUCHANAN

A dashing young officer, half French, half English, distinguished for his dare-devil exploits, goes in disguise to England, wher- a price has been set on his life, and surreptitiously visits his mother's family. Falling in love with his beautiful cousin, he gets into a series of thrilling difficulties. The sprightly way in which the story is told, the dashing impudence of the hero, and the charm of the heroine, combine with the beauty of the volume to make a delightful gift-book.

With Illustrations in Color and Marginal Decorations by Elizabeth Shippen Green. Crown 8vo, Ornamented Cloth, Uncut Edges, Gilt Top, in box. net, $2.00

A DOG'S TALE "Tom Sawyer," "Innocents Abroad," etc. This famous dog story is now published in a beautiful holiday edition, with pictures in color, in response to the numerous demands for it in book form. It is a powerful piece of fiction, being told entirely from the dog's standpoint, and has made a widespread appeal to all classes of reasiers. To lovers of dogs—and they are innumerable—this remarkable and sympathetic tale, with its sermon against vivisection, will be most welcome.

With Illustrations in Color by W. T. Smedley. Post 8vo, $1.00

OVER THE HILL TO THE POOR-HOUSE

By WILL CARLETON

Author of "Farm Baliads," "for of Two Centuries," etc. "Songs

This is the poem that, with one or two others, first made Will Carleton famous. The author has written a preface especially for this edition, in which he tells some interesting things about the early vogue and criticism of this poem, and its authoritity as to facts. It is printed decorated, and bound in a way that makes it most appropriate as a Christmas gift.

Illustrated. Marginal Decorations in Color. Square 8vo, in box, net, $2 00.

HARPER & BRO., Publishers, NEW YORK

School Trustees, Principals,

Teachers.

And others interested, are invited to consider the advantages offered by the Nation as an advertising medium. School advertisements are printed in a uniform typography, with the address in the first line, classification being made by States, alphabetically, unless especially ordered displayed on other pages.

The Nation, in its special field of political and literary criticism, is unlike any other periodical, American or foreign. About 10,000 cop.es are circulated weekly, but these figures do not accurately represent the number of its readers. It is taken by reading clubs and literary associations in a large number of places, and may be found on file in every library of importance in the country. There are probably few weekly periodicals whose columns offer so favorable an opportunity for reaching an audience interested in educational matters.

Advertising rates, 15 cents a line each insertion, with the following discounts: 5 per cent. on 4 insertions, 10 per cent on 8 insertions, 12½ per cent. on 13 insertions, 15 per cent. on 26 insertions, 20 per cent on 39 insertions, 25 per cent. on 52 insertions.

The Nation is sent free while advertisement continues.

Orders may be forwarded through any responsible advertising agency, or directly to

THE NATION, 208 Broadway, N. Y.

STANDARD AUTHORS IN SETS

Balzac, Brontő, Bulwer, Carlyle, Cooper, Dickens, Dumas, De Foe, Eliot, Fielding, Gibbon, Gulzot, Hawthorne, Hugo, Irving, Macaulay, Poe, Reade, Ruskin, Scott, Smollett, Shakespeare, Thackeray, Toistoi.

Send for Descriptive Booklet.

THOMAS Y. CROWELL & CO., New York

LIBRARY RESEARCH

Topics of all kinds and in any language looked up in large libraries for scholars, writers and others who have not at hand the books needed in reparing the es, lectures, addresses, club papers, books or articles for publication, or in any piece of investigation. Highest university and library references. Miss M. H. Bucking-Ham, No. 96 Chestnut Street, Boston, Mass.

WILLIAM R. JENKINS

FRENCH AND OTHER FOREIGN Sixth Avenue and 48th Street NEW YORK

BOOKS NO BRANCH STORES

SEND FOR CATALOGUES

Handy Volume Classics

POCKET EDITION

Used by schools and colleges everywhere. 156 vols. List price, 35c. per vol. (to schools, 25c.).

SEND FOR LIST.

Thomas Y. Crowell@Co., New York

Forty Millions

are spent yearly in this country for pianos, and scarcely any family is without a piano or organ.

- ¶ The expenditure for encyclopaedias is insignificant in comparison; many families are without any, and many have an antiquated, useless one.
- ¶ Is not an encyclopaedia more necessary in the home than a piano?
- ¶ The piano can be used only after diligent practice and costly, intelligent instruction. The encylopaedia offers its store of information and entertainment to every one who can read.
- ¶ If you would make your home interesting, your children intelligent and successful in social and business life, you should have a good modern encyclopaedia at hand to answer the questions arising in reading and conversation.
- ¶ THE NEW INTERNATIONAL is the only complete new encyclopaedia issued for more than ten years.
- ¶ It has nearly double the number of articles, nearly twice as much matter, and is far better illustrated than any work of its kind in the English language.
- ¶ It is an entirely new work, written by Americans for Americans, though international in its scope.
- ¶ The names of its Editors, Daniel Coit Gilman, LL.D., President Johns Hopkins University (1876-1902), President of Carnegie Institution; Harry Thurston Peck, Ph.D., L.H.D., Professor in Columbia University; Frank Moore Colby, M.A., late Professor in New York University, guarantee the high character of the work.
- ¶ A supplementary volume just completed contains courses of reading and study in the encyclopaedia. It classifies the articles on each subject and guides the reader with practical hints to a complete survey of any department of knowledge.
- ¶ It is unfair to judge THE NEW INTERNATIONAL ENCYCLOPAEDIA by a cursory examination. The publishers have prepared an eighty-page book of information about it.
- This book may be had for the asking, or you may have one of the volumes sent you for examination—no charge, no obligation, no expense to you, except to answer this advertisement.
- It is the cornerstone of the family library, and as such its absence cannot be excused from the view-point of price.
- We have arranged a system by which you can own this work and scarcely feel the outlay.
- ¶ Cut out and mail the coupon to-day, that we may send you the eighty-page book of description and terms.

DODD, MEAD & COMPANY

372 FIFTH AVENUE NEW YORK CITY Post-Office.

OF

Donn,

MRAD & Co.

Please send, without cost to me, the handsome book des-

PATIONAL ENCYCLOPADIA

and containing specimen pages, colored illustrations maps, and information regarding orice and easy-payment plan.

N

0

T

E

W

0

R

T

H

T

E

X

T

B

0

0

TE

W

0

R

T

H

T

E

X

T

B

0

0

8

TEXT-BOOKS THAT LEAD

HISTORY

Myers' Ancient History—Revised Edition.
Myers' Eastern Nations and Greece—Revised Edition.
Myers' History of Rome—Revised Edition.
Montgomery's Student's American History.
Montgomery's Leading Facts of English History.
Montgomery's Leading Facts of French History.

LATIN

Allen and Greenough's New Latin Grammar. Allen and Greenough's Latin Texts. Collar and Daniell's First Year Latin.

SCIENCE

Bergen's Elements of Botany, Revised Edition. Davis' Physical Geographies.

These books for high schools and colleges are more widely used throughout the country than are any other texts in the same subjects and of similar grades.

IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS

Cheyney's Short History of England.

Dyer's Machiavelli and the Modern State.

Hitchcock's Louisiana Purchase.

Richardson's Syllabus of Continental European History.
Robinson's Introduction to the History of Western Europe.
Robinson's Readings in European History. Volume 1.
Van Dyke's Poems of Tennyson.
Von Mach's Greek Sculpture: Its Spirit and Principles.

Send for descriptive announcements.

CINN AND COMPANY, Boston.

Old South Leaflets

contains twenty-five leaflets of the Old South series. The subjects include the English explorations in America; the expansion of the United States; the Peace Movement, etc. Bound in cloth, $1.50.

Old South Meeting House,

Washington St., Boston.

"Your catalogue for 1903 is the most delightful production of its kind that ever came my way."

The Mosher Books

THE NEW CATALOGUE FOR 1904
CHOICELY PRINTED IN RED AND BLACK, DONE
UP IN OLD STYLE BLUE
WRAPPER, UNCUT
EDGES, MAILED FREE
ON REQUEST TO ALL BOOK LOVERS ON AND AFTER OCTOBER 15TH.

THOS. B. MOSHER Portland, Maine.

William Lloyd Garrison, 1805-1879.

The Story of his Life, told by his Children.
Illustrated with over 40 portraits, views, etc. 4 vols., 8vo, gilt top, $8.00 net.

This important work (originally published by the Century Company) has been reduced in price from $12.00 to $8.00, a remarkably low sum for what is unquestionably one of the handsomest products of the American press.

"It is, for the anti-slavery record, final; and the service done to our national history is as great as that to a father's memory. Its one eminent trait, however, is its justice."—Atlantic Monthly.

"In fact, Southern history is not complete without this work."—Atlanta Constitution.

. For sale by booksellers. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price by the publishers.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO.,
BOSTON AND NEW YORK,

THACKERAY

Important offer to Thackeray admirers

The Bedford Edition of Tirackeray recently announced has been prepared for those who are especially interested in this author, and for the libraries of collectors and students.

IT IS NOT SOLD THROUGH THE BOOKSTORES, AND IT CANNOT BE SUPPLIED BY SUBSCRIPTION AGENTS

In order to circulate further information concening this edition we will send by mail prepaid a proof impression on India paper mounted for framing of the new engraving that has been made for this edition from one of the original designs by Bernard Partridge. L. Raven-Hill, Wal. Paget or H. M. Brock, as you prefer, upon receipt of your written application. One hundred of these pictures only can be supplied in this manner, and the applications will be filled in the order of their receipt. No charge whatever will be made for the picture.

GEORGE D. SPROUL, Publisher, 150 Fifth Avenue.

Financial.

Investments.

We offer a selected list of HIGH GRADE BONDS and guaranteed STOCKS paying from 3½ to 5%. The securities are on hand for immediate delivery.

Lists and full particulars upon application.

Redmond & Co.,

BANKERS.

507 Chestnut St., 41 Wall Street, PHILADELPHIA. NEW YORK

We buy and sell bills of exchanges and LETTERS make Cable transfers of money on Europe,
OF lections and issue Commercial and TravelCREDIT. lers Credits available in all parts of the International Cheques, Certificates of Deposit.

BROWN BROTHERS & CO.
NO. 59 WALL STREET, NEW YORK.

Save Your Eyes

KEEP YOUR GLASSES CLEAN.

Send for package of our prepared (absorbent) Polishing Paper for cleaning eye-glasses, etc.

10 cents per package: 3 for 25c.

Calumet Chemical Co.
Blue Island, III.

These trade-mark crissgross lines on every package

BARLE COYSTAIS,
Perfect Breakfast of Devert Health Cereals.
PANSY FLOUR or Bleut, Cake and Pastry
Unlike all oner bods. Ask Grovers
For book of ample, write FARWELL & RHINES, Watertown, N. Y. U.S.A.

